SGA turnout above average

By CAIT PURINTON
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State's voter turnout is slightly higher than the national average, but the percentage of voting students is still less than a fourth of the student population.

Student Body President Tracey Mann said the national average for student participation in student body elections is 10 percent, and last year K-State had a 14-percent voter turnout in general student government elections.

Student Activities Coordinator Gayle Spencer said because more people are running, there are more issues, so more students can find an issue that interests them.

"The students that are elected are given a lot of responsibility at this university, and if I were a student, I would want people to represent me who have good issues and good ideas," Spencer said.

Mann said issues can make a difference. For example, in last year's campaign, Mann said his and Student Body Vice President Andy Macklin's platform on a parking permit for the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex made a difference.

"Last year, people would come up to Andy and I and say 'hey, I voted today, and I've never voted before,'" Mann said.

The key is getting students who normally wouldn't vote to do so, he said. If each candidate could get 100 of their friends to get five more people to the polls, voter apathy would decrease.

In addition, Mann said, voter apathy will decrease by increasing student involvement on campus as more active students vote.

Dean of Student Life Pat Bosco said few schools in this country have as many vehicles for student involvement as K-State.

Bosco said the 18- to 22-year-old age

"IF YOU DON'T EXERCISE YOUR RIGHT TO VOTE, YOU DON'T HAVE A RIGHT TO COMPLAIN."

— GAYLE SPENCER
COORDINATOR, STUDENT ACTIVITIES AND SERVICES

group participates less than past age groups.

"I am hopeful students go against the flow and choose to vote in this year's Student Governing Association election," Bosco said.

Mann said voter turnout is a good indicator of what's really happening, and there are no serious issues.

"Students are happy with K-State, or they wouldn't feel the need to go out and vote," he said.

This semester K-State's SGA was recognized as the best in the country, and Bosco said its good work might decrease voting because students see the officials doing their jobs.

"They take their jobs very seriously, and put in long hours. They genuinely want what's best for K-State students. I've seen it year after year," Bosco said.

Spencer said there is still no excuse not to vote.

"If you don't exercise your right to vote, you don't have a right to complain," she said.

Senate candidates found guilty of distribution, chalking violations

By JOE HURLA
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Three Student Governing Association candidates were found guilty of campaign violations by the Elections Committee Sunday.

Nick Oberst, student senate candidate in the College of Arts and Sciences, and Heath Schroeder, student senate candidate in the College of Business Administration, were both found guilty of mass distribution, a serious offense, said Paul English, Elections Committee Hearing Board Chair.

According to the elections regulations code, distribution of campaign materials to individuals must be made by an individual, and any form of contact beyond personal interaction is prohibited.

English said Lucas Buel, student senate candidate in the College of Business Administration, was also found guilty of a chalking and a posting violation. Buel's second minor violation was the equivalent of one major violation, English said.

Buel's chalking violation was the result of chalking on an off-limit sidewalk, and his posting violation came when he posted a sign in an off-limit area.

He said all of the violations could warrant disqualification but said several circumstances made this unlikely.

"In assessing penalties, the hearing board shall consider the severity of the violation or any mitigating factors that may be involved in the situation as well as any cooperation provided by any person so involved," English said, citing the elections regulations code.

He said guilt has been determined for all three candidates, but specific punishments have only been determined for Oberst and Schroeder.

"They're liable for a $15 fine each," English said. "They'll also both be placed on probation, and they have to write a letter to the editor stating what happened, offering advice for other candidates and explaining why it's important to find out the rules before you do anything."

Schroeder said he was glad his punishment hadn't been too extreme but thought it was a difficult issue because the rules left some doubt about what "mass distribution" specifically was.

"We didn't feel that 36 sheets was a mass distribution," Schroeder said. "We asked four other people, and none of them knew if this was a violation. If none of them knew, there are probably other people that don't know."

"I want to be elected fairly," Schroeder said. "We wouldn't have done this if we'd have known it was a violation."

With the bases loaded and no outs in the first inning, Joe DiMaggio strikes out during the World Series against the Brooklyn Dodgers in 1947. DiMaggio died Monday, March 8, 1999, at his home in Hollywood, Fla., at the age of 84. DiMaggio was known for achievements on the field such as a 56-game hitting streak, three Most Valuable Player awards, 10 American League pennants and nine World Series titles in 13 seasons with the New York Yankees.

JOLTIN' JOE HAS LEFT AND GONE AWAY

Death of baseball legend Joe DiMaggio saddens generations

By STEVEN WINE
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

HOLLYWOOD, Fla. — He was simply and forever the Yankee Clipper, amazing America with The Streak, captivating it with his class and inspiring wistful lines in literature and song.

Joe DiMaggio died at home Monday, surrounded by family and friends, following a five-month battle with lung cancer.

At age 84, Joltin' Joe has left and gone away.

But his legend lingers, shoulder-to-shoulder with the likes of Babe Ruth and Lou Gehrig, his fellow Yankees. Very few others could measure up to them on the sports scene this century.

DiMaggio underwent surgery in October, battling complications for weeks afterward and even falling into a coma briefly during his 99-day hospitalization. But he also astounded his doctors by repeatedly bouncing back.

DiMaggio left the hospital Jan. 19 to recuperate at home, where his bed was decorated with a sign that said, "April 9, Yankee Stadium or Bust."

He died shortly after midnight, said Morris Engelberg, his long-time friend and attorney, one month and one day shy of making it back to the Bronx for the home opener. At his bedside were brother Dominick, a former major-league outfielder; two grandchildren; Engelberg; and Joe Nacchio, his friend of 59 years.

Tributes poured in from baseball's past and present.

Said Ted Williams, who shared the spotlight with DiMaggio in the 1941 season by batting .406 for Boston, the last time anyone batted .400: "There is no one Ted Williams admired, respected and envied more than Joe DiMaggio. Because of my close relationship with the DiMaggio family, I feel a very deep personal loss."

Said former Dodgers manager Tom Lasorda: "If you said to God, 'Create someone who was what a baseball player should be,' God would have created Joe DiMaggio. And he did."

Commissioner Bud Selig said he idolized DiMaggio: "I never saw a player who was as graceful. There was an aura about him that was amazing."

The Hall of Fame flag in Cooperstown, N.Y., was lowered to half-staff, and a wreath was placed around DiMaggio's plaque. U.S. flags at Yankee Stadium, including the one in left field's hallowed Monument Park, were also at half-staff.

DiMaggio roamed center field and ran the base paths for 13 years through 1951, playing for 10 pennant winners and nine World Series champions despite missing three years because of service in World War II.

He batted .325 lifetime, with 361 home runs. He won three American League Most Valuable Player awards, appeared in 11 All-Star games, and he entered the Hall of Fame in 1955, his third year of eligibility. For half a century, he was introduced as "the greatest living player."

Sorority to colonize with fall informal rush

By JENNIFER O'NEILL
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

With the departure of Sigma Sigma Sorority from K-State's greek system coming in May, another sorority will try to rebuild at the university this fall. After initial discussions last summer to recolonize, Kappa Delta sorority will move in at 1220 Centennial Drive next semester.

The Kappa Delta national sorority closed its K-State chapter 5 years ago because of struggling numbers. It left with the understanding that National Panhellenic Council would invite it back.

"Last semester's pledge class quotas were up, university enrollment was up and rush enrollment was up by 100 people," Barb Robel, Greek Affairs adviser, said. "I think it'll be another strong sorority that's certainly needed."

Since the sorority's colonization will not be until late September, it won't participate in formal rush.

From Sept. 24 to 26, Kappa Delta will have an event similar to an informal rush. There will be an informational meeting for anyone who wants to attend. Next, there will be interviews conducted by a team of national officers, followed by a preference party that will be hosted by other Kappa Delta chapter members. This plan is set by the national sorority, but it is up to the chapter consultant and local alumnae to implement details.

"I think the timing is good, and it will attract a lot of women who didn't go through rush initially or didn't go all the way through," said Lindsey Roy, senior in advertising and Panhellenic Council president. "Kappa Delta has done a similar thing on a lot of other campuses."

From the group of women invited to join in September, the national officers will elect a temporary executive board.

An adviser will serve as a mentor for the semester in terms of officer training and programming social events.

During the first semester, Kappa Delta will have an open rush and have Bison escapes from hospital, eludes search Monday night

By TRAVIS D. LENKNER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A 500-pound bison escaped from the Veterinary Medicine Teaching Hospital at about 7:30 p.m. Monday and had not been found at press time early this morning.

More than 20 volunteers and police officers combed the areas around the Veterinary Medicine Complex on Monday night, using vehicles to cover more ground.

K-State Police Lt. Dave Johnson said the search was stopped before midnight because the animal wasn't likely to move much before morning.

"They called it off for tonight because supposedly those animals will bed down, so she's probably lying down somewhere," Johnson said late Monday night. "They'll pick it up in the morning. With daylight, they'll have a lot better luck."

The search was scheduled to resume this morning.

Hospital Director Dr. Roger Fingland said students should stay away from the bison if they see her on campus today.

"There's no danger if they see her," he said, "but there would be danger if she was in a confined place and someone tried to approach her."

"If they see her, they simply need to call either the Vet school or the K-State police," Fingland said.

Fingland said Monday night that the bison was most likely somewhere in the Silent Bob cancels presentation after back injury at film shoot

By KELLY EVENSON
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The man known as Silent Bob, director Kevin Smith, canceled his lecture scheduled for Monday night in McCain Auditorium because of a back injury he sustained during a film shoot, Teto Henderson, director of the Union Program Council, said.

"His agency notified us this morning, and we have contacted all of the radio stations, including the Lazer in Lawrence, of the cancellation," Henderson said.

Smith, who is the director of movies such as "Clerks," "Mallrats" and "Chasing Amy," was supposed to give K-State students an insight to the man behind the character during his lecture.

Henderson said at this time, UPC is attempting to reschedule with Smith's agency, and hopefully will bring Smith to K-State at a later date. As of Monday night, the alternate date was not known.

Heide McBride, program advisor for UPC, said she didn't think UPC would be able to reschedule Smith's appearance and lecture because of the availability of him and McCain Auditorium.

"He is a very busy man, and it will be hard to find a date that is good for both him and McCain," McBride said.

If students are interested in refunds, they should go to the UPC office in the K-State Student Union. Monday, McBride said several students had already requested refunds, but she said most might be waiting to hear if the

Two men await prosecution in Arkansas drowning case

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. — Two men accused in a murderous campaign to overthrow the U.S. government and set up a whites-only nation drowned an Arkansas family and then joked that the victims were on a "liquid diet," a federal prosecutor said Monday.

Chevie Kehoe, 26, of Colville, Wash., and Danny Lee, 26, of Yukon, Okla., are charged with murder, racketeering and conspiracy. They could get the death penalty if convicted.

Kehoe and Lee are accused of using a campaign of violence to set up a whites-only nation in the Pacific Northwest.

The crimes associated with their alleged plot include a 1996 bombing at the city hall in Spokane, Wash.; shootouts with Ohio police; the slayings of two people in Idaho; and the drownings of a white Arkansas family of three.

U.S. Attorney Dan Stripling told the mostly black jury during opening statements Monday that Kehoe's beliefs were based on those of Robert Mathews, the founder of the Aryan Nations white supremacist group. Mathews was killed in 1984 when his hideout caught fire during a shootout with federal agents in Washington state.

The prosecutor said Kehoe and Lee robbed the Arkansas family in 1996 and killed them by taping plastic bags over their heads, weighing them down with rocks and throwing them into a bayou.

Later, the defendants told Kehoe's parents that the family was on "a liquid diet," Stripling said.

The judge has issued a gag order in the case, but Lee's mother, Lea Graham, said her son is innocent and no racist.

NASA fails to rescue star project, loses $73 million

LOS ANGELES — NASA was unable to save a multimillion-dollar star research mission but continued efforts Monday to bring its satellite under control to determine what went wrong.

All the frozen hydrogen needed to cool the Wide-Field Infrared Explorer satellite's telescope melted and forced its way out a vent into space over the weekend, rendering the instrument useless and ending the mission before it began.

NASA spent about $73 million on the satellite's development, launch and operations, said Don Savage, a space agency spokesman. Had the mission gone forward, operations and data analysis costs would have put the total over $80 million.

Ed Weiler, associate administrator for space science at NASA headquarters, said he was disappointed but was confident that upcoming missions could accomplish some of the goals, "so it will be science delayed rather than science lost."

The satellite, nicknamed Wire, was intended to study starburst galaxies, those in which rapid star formation is taking place. It was also going to study infant galaxies known as protogalaxies.

The satellite incorporated a variety of new technologies and can still be used for engineering tests, said Lynn Jenner, a spokeswoman for Goddard Space Flight Center, where it was developed.

Freighter bow begins 2nd attempt at deep-sea burial

WALDPOR, Ore. — Aided by a favorable tide and an offshore storm, the broken-off, oil-laden bow of the freighter New Carissa was dragged off the beach Monday in the second attempt to send it to a deep-water burial.

It will be towed about 200 miles out to sea to be sunk in deep, cold water. The trip is expected to take at least 48 hours.

The bow, still holding an estimated 130,000 gallons of heavy oil, washed up near this town of 1,700 on the Central Oregon coast last Wednesday after breaking loose from the Sea Victory in a heavy storm.

This time, storms should not be a problem, with wind expected to decrease and seas running no more than 15 feet, said Bill Milwee, salvage consultant to the ship's Japanese owners.

Once the bow reaches its intended burial site, plans call for a Coast Guard cutter to use its deck gun to sink the derelict in 12,000 feet of water, Coast Guard Cmdr. Dawayne Penberthy said today. The trick, he said, will be to put enough holes in the bow to sink it without rupturing the fuel tanks; a skimmer boat will be on hand to catch any spills.

The stern remains stranded near Coos Bay, 80 miles south, where the ship ran aground Feb. 4 during another storm.

When it struck the coast, the ship carried 400,000 gallons of thick bunker oil and diesel fuel for its engines.

About half of the oil was burned off by Navy explosives experts on Feb. 10, but hours after the fire, the ship split in two, spilling some 70,000 gallons.

U.S. will aid Taiwan despite possible Chinese retaliation

WASHINGTON, D.C. — The Clinton administration chided Chinese authorities Monday for warning the United States against helping Taiwan develop a defense against missile attacks.

"Instead of worrying about a decision that has not been made to deploy defensive technologies that do not yet exist, the Chinese should focus on the regional and global proliferation of missiles," State Department spokesman James P. Rubin said.

He noted the Taiwanese are assessing their own capabilities and needs, and therefore, it is too early to comment about their intentions.

On Friday, China warned that any U.S. transfer of missile defense technology to Taiwan would be the "last straw" and would "certainly lead to serious consequences."

Rubin said the United States will fulfill its security commitments to Taiwan and will continue to assist the island, which the government in Beijing considers a renegade province, in meeting legitimate defensive needs.

He said Secretary of State Madeleine Albright made the same points to Chinese authorities last week during a visit to Beijing.

U.N. focuses effort to stop violence against women

UNITED NATIONS — Rape, wife-beating, forced prostitution and other violence against women must stop, activists said Monday as the United Nations linked the world in a live video-conference for International Women's Day.

Celebrities like Julie Andrews and Bianca Jagger joined victims, activists and government leaders in focusing a global spotlight Monday on what U.N. Secretary-General Kofi Annan called "the most shameful human rights violation."

All agreed there has been progress combating violence against women. Dozens of countries have changed laws and launched education campaigns. But the verdict from participants in New York, Nairobi, Kenya; New Delhi; and Strasbourg, France was unanimous: Much more remains to be done — especially by men.

"The pandemic of violence against women and girls can never be stopped without concentrated, determined activism by men," said Noeleen Heyzer, executive director of the U.N. Development Fund for Women, the driving force behind the videoconference broadcast on the Internet and by satellite to a global audience.

According to a World Bank study, one-fourth to one-half of all women have suffered physical abuse by an intimate partner. In the United States, the FBI reports that a woman is battered by a partner every 15 seconds.

TAX ADVANTAGED SOLUTIONS FROM TIAA-CREF

IF YOU THOUGHT COLLEGE WAS EXPENSIVE, TRY PUTTING YOURSELF THROUGH RETIREMENT.

Think about supporting yourself for twenty-five, thirty years or longer in retirement. It might be the greatest financial test you'll ever face. Fortunately, you have two valuable assets in your favor: time and tax deferral.

The key is to begin saving now. Delaying your decision for even a year or two can have a big impact on the amount of income you'll have when you retire.

What's the simplest way to get started? Save in pretax dollars and make the most of tax deferral. There's simply no more painless or powerful way to build a comfortable and secure tomorrow.

SRAs and IRAs makes it easy.

SRAs — tax-deferred annuities from TIAA-CREF — and our range of IRAs offer smart and easy ways to build the extra income your pension and Social Security benefits may not cover. They're backed by the same exclusive investment choices, low expenses, and personal service that have made TIAA-CREF the retirement plan of choice among America's education and research communities.

Call 1 800 842-2776 and find out for yourself how easy it is to put yourself through retirement when you have time and TIAA-CREF on your side.

Forum focuses on post-tenure review system

By CHRISTINE ROEGER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Three years after K-State's solution for post-tenure review, about 60 faculty members gave feedback Monday concerning their experiences with the policy.

Faculty Senate President Talat Rahman, Provost James Coffman and Brad Fenwick, professor of diagnostic medicine pathobiology, presented the workshop.

According to the Faculty Senate handbook, tenure guarantees freedom of teaching, research and a sufficient degree of economic security to make teaching at a university attractive.

In May 1996, a chronic low achievement policy was linked to the original post-tenure annual review. The policy takes a more stringent measurement of faculty member performance.

"The value of college has changed a lot," Coffman said. "People think more of buying a degree as a commodity."

Each department had to develop its own guidelines to match the yearly performance goals in research and teaching based on the post-tenure review policy.

"It pushed a lot of responsibility to faculty," Fenwick said. "Now we are at the point where the system is really working."

Rahman said K-State has a unique system because the department faculty members have controlled the criteria and implemented policies.

The post-tenure review allows K-State faculty members to re-allocate their workload, Rahman said.

For example, a weak teaching performance can be balanced with a strength in research.

Many faculty members said they appreciated K-State's review system.

"Having come from an institution that does not have a post-annual review, I think it's reasonable to encourage each individual to be more productive," Sonny Ramaswamy, head of the Department of Entomology, said.

Most of the faculty in attendance said the review has been beneficial to each department.

"With this system we capitalize on peoples' strengths," Coffman said.

When an annual evaluation indicates a tenured faculty member's performance has fallen below the minimum acceptance level, the department head suggests a course of action.

Many faculty members criticized the university's lack of funds to implement programs to improve performance.

"We simply have insufficient resources to address the issue," Jim Machor, professor in English, said.

Candidates face off in debate

By PAM LEWIS
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Campaign spending was the main issue discussed at Golden Key National Honor Society's "Meet the Candidates" debate Monday in the K-State Student Union Big 12 Room.

Golden Key National Honor Society provided students an opportunity to get to know the presidential and vice presidential candidates before voting concludes Wednesday.

After the candidates introduced themselves and their campaign platforms, the floor was opened to students' questions and concerns.

Presidential candidate Rick Wooten said his campaign lacked the funds but not the important issues.

"We feel we are the underdogs in this group. As it was posted in the Collegian in the expenditure report, we spent the least out of everybody. The top group outspent us by a ratio of 118-1," Wooten, junior in finance, said. "So pretty much, we are running a bare bones campaign."

Each presidential ticket was limited to $3,000. Individual donors, which included students, faculty and relatives, could not exceed $15. Each ticket could not contribute more than $815 of its own money to the campaign.

Presidential candidate Justin VanNest, junior in political science, said he thought $3,000 was a good limit. He said he would like to make it more reasonable for the students.

"I would like to see something like the U.S. presidential candidates have where people can mark a box on their tax form to contribute to presidential campaigns," VanNest said. "I would like to see a block on tuition fees that asks students if they would like 50 cents of their privilege fees to go to campaign funds."

Presidential candidate Leo Prieto, senior in pre-law and Spanish, and his running mate Chris Bainter, junior in computer engineering, said they spent about $2,000, which came mostly from donations. Presidential candidate Jason Heinrich, senior in industrial engineering, and running mate Gabe Eckert, senior in agricultural journalism, said the majority of their money also came from donations.

The candidates also discussed whether tuition or privilege fees should be increased to fund Hale Library.

"We would like to give more power to the students so they have somewhat of a say in where there money goes," presidential candidate Chris McCarthy, junior in physical anthropology, said. "There are all kinds of organizations on campus, and we want the students to have a say of where they want more of their privilege fees to be allocated."

Presidential candidate Willis Kidd, senior in agricultural economics, and vice presidential candidate Adam Beel, senior in animal science and industry, had a similar view on how privilege fees should be used.

"Our proposed plan would be to have an addition to the existing privilege fee," Kidd said. "If you thought something needed allocated more money, than you could have the option to do so."

Most of the candidates agreed that an increase in privilege fees, if voted for by the students, was the answer to campus funding problems.

"I like how the Student Senate hired an internal auditor to look at privilege fees and to see if the money we are giving to agencies on campus is being spent wisely," Eckert said. "One thing that might also be beneficial is to publicize that more to let people know what the auditors find out."

The candidates agreed that a better relationship needed to be established with the students about issues and where their money is being spent.

Prieto and Bainter said they felt the city needs to work with K-State more on projects such as a shuttle service.

"Students make up one third of Manhattan," Prieto said.

Running-mates Aaron Velasquez, senior in electrical engineering, and Brad Klein, sophomore in family studies, human services and social work, said their lack of experience in Student Governing Association can be considered an asset.

"We are the students with no great campaign plans — that makes it easier for the students to relate to us," Klein said.

New sorority needs support from greeks

The arrival of a new sorority is deserving of a second look. Another house is not necessarily a bad idea, but it will be interesting to see how the addition affects the greek system as a whole.

There is an important lesson to be learned from the departure of Sigma Sigma Sigma. Without the support of the entire greek system, a house will fail. Kappa Delta must have the backing of other houses, or it will suffer the same fate as the Tri-Sigmas.

Remember, the two houses are similar when it comes to their life at K-State. Kappa Delta left K-State five years ago, knowing it would return. Tri-Sigma recolonized in 1996 after effectively being closed for three months. The time difference, however, might be the key to Kappa Delta's success.

When a house has trouble with recruiting members, it becomes a stigma the house is unable to shake. How did Kappa Delta cope? They closed long enough for all of it's former members, and most of the campus for that matter, to forget about the stereotype.

Tri-Sigma closed but not long enough to make people think the new house would be any different.

The importance of all the reorganization is simply this — a good greek system looks out for its own. K-State's greeks are honored time and again for their work with the community and the strength of their houses. But the other side of the coin is that some houses are truly struggling to keep up with members.

When the strong houses have too many members, the percentage of members that actually live in the house declines. It defeats the purpose of calling a greek house a living organization. Instead, the house becomes only a social organization. Most greeks would agree that such an image does not help maintain a strong greek system.

K-State should happily welcome Kappa Delta back to campus, but it will suffer the same fate of Tri-Sigma if the rest of the greek system does not step up and help.

Judging people as individuals, not groups, would combat generalizations

DANEDRI THOMPSON

John William King grew up in a loving home in Jasper, Texas. His father said both of his parents invested plenty of love in him. He went to school with black children and had black playmates. Eventually, he grew up and tied James Byrd Jr. to the bumper of his pick-up truck and drug him to his death because Byrd was black. King left everyone asking, what created such hate in John William King?

Unfortunately for Byrd, a few bad apples in King's life spoiled an entire barrel. While in prison for a parole violation, King was attacked by black inmates. He was rescued by white supremacists. Every bad experience King ever had with a black person contributed to his racist views. The attack cemented those feelings and in his mind probably proved the thoughts he already had.

Ironically, King is a bad apple in his own barrel. The white supremacy movement seems to be trying to reinvent itself. It is trying to align its message with the values of middle-America. Its members are ditching their white sheets and hoods for suits and ties. Although they don't appear to be sorry for what happened to James, many white supremacist groups seem to be sorry King has hurt their cause by being too extreme.

When you are a minority or a part of a misrepresented group, you have an obligation to others in your ethnic or misrepresented group to be on your best behavior always. You must realize that when you first meet people, they might not judge only you. They also might judge any group you represent.

In the pro-life movement, members of pro-life groups are battling serious public relations problems. Their problems stem from certain bad apples who blow up abortion clinics and murder abortion doctors. Although a huge majority of pro-life people have never blown up a building or murdered a doctor, people and the news media rarely notice the good, but they almost always will notice and remember the bad.

You don't even have to be a member of a highly controversial political group to have your actions judged as the actions of those you represent.

It only takes one person seated close to fans from another school and acting in an unsportsmanlike fashion at a K-State football game for the entire K-State student population to be judged as poor sports.

It definitely isn't fair that people sometimes judge everyone else in your ethnic group, organization or movement based on your actions alone. That's life, and life isn't always fair.

However, there are ways we can combat this problem. The most obvious is for each of us to judge each person we meet as an individual. However, that is an idea that has been around forever, and we still haven't figured it out. A better way to fight the stereotypes caused by bad apples is to rid the world of those apples. That means realizing that although it is unfair, you represent your family, your friends and any group you choose to align yourself with. Be the best you possibly can be. If you can't do it for yourself, do it for those you represent.

Look at the gigantic storm-water culverts being put in on Anderson Avenue. Then consider the small, antiquated pipes they'll be connected to. Guess why there will be major flooding in Aggieville and south of the campus in the future.

I think an entire page of the Collegian should be devoted to the Campus Fourum.

I understand that the engagement picture service is a free service. But it's pretty pathetic when the Collegian can't even copy down information off of a piece of paper. It says a lot about a paper that can't even do that.

Is Manhattan really so big that we really need a public mass transit? Stop being lazy and walk.

I just want to congratulate the K-State basketball team on a well-played game. We're proud of you.

Hey, Asbury — when Tony Kitt's doing good with four minutes left in the game, you don't take him out and sit him on the bench for the rest of it. Thanks. We lost to KU.

I'm tired of watching our basketball team play their guts out every time they play KU, and then watching the refs take it away from them. Good job, fellas, you had a good season. Good luck in the NIT.

I don't think it's important to fund Hale Library. Instead of funding Hale Library, let's make Lafene Health Center a better place for the students to go.

READERS write

Students need to check the facts before judging others

Editor,

In regards to the 19 individuals who wrote Friday to ridicule the Student Senate for passing privilege fee assistance for the campus radio station and the library, we have had enough. The radio station did not magically appear in debt one day due to some act of a higher power, and the students who work there certainly aren't responsible for the $74,000 spending spree. More than 100 student volunteers who have worked very hard to create a radio station that can be utilized on this campus, not only as an educational experience but as an information source, would suffer.

The "bail out" that was mentioned was an emergency funding request that allowed a valuable campus resource to continue offering an experience-based education to the students of K-State. And to the 19 people who signed the letter stating that you don't even listen to the station, there are over 10,000 students who now do. That doesn't include the surrounding community that is now tuned in. We now have over 45 percent of campus tuned in.

erage of the events, it is unfortunate that anyone would choose to use a source such as the Collegian to attack any campus group, whether it be the radio station or Black Student Union. Individuals standing up for what they believe is right are admirable and not deserving of the racially motivated remarks that appear on this opinion page.

Next time you choose to blast a group of students for doing something to make this campus and community better for everyone, I suggest you find out the facts before making fools of yourselves.

Nineteen students picking on a student-run organization that serves over 10,000 is what is really pathetic.

FLETCHER JACOBS

lounge around and be lazy. The culture of college is just not really geared toward hopping out of bed on Sundays to jaunt off to church. I didn't think this would affect me at all, because I already had a religion.

I was raised to believe in the Christian God. For my family, Sunday consisted of early rising, getting the children off to Sunday school and then the whole family sitting on the back pew in church (anyone with a big family with small kids can relate to that one). It is all quite simple, much the same way many of my fellow Christians were raised. That is the way most of us found our religion. Kind of like politics. It is what your parents did. No problem.

That kept me on the straight and narrow for the first 18 years of my life. My family Going off to college, one of last things students expect to find is religion.

Most students are away from any sort of authority for the first time. Children who were forced to go to church at home don't have to.

Besides, many services occur on Sunday morning, and the last place college students want to be then is a place of worship. Plus, it is so much easier just to prayed before meals when we were all together. I can vividly remember praying to God at every significant point or event in my life, whether it be asking for strength or for guidance. Nothing scares me more than the concept of hell. Whenever I would do something wrong, there was always a little voice that would yell, "What are you doing, jack-ass?" I always thought I would get a little angel and devil at my shoulders, but instead, my moral compass insisted on hurling insults at me when I did wrong. Sometimes I would listen to the voice inside me; sometimes I would ignore it. The point is, I got all of these things because of my beliefs in God.

Then this strange thing happened when I went to college. I didn't lose my religion like REM, but it did change. I never found a church in Manhattan. When I go home, I still go to church, but that is not the same. Next, I found that I prayed less and less. I have never been a perfect Christian, but I usually tried to pray more than just those prayers that begin, "I know I haven't been real good lately, but if you could just do this one thing for me..."

The final straw was when I began to question myself. Why am I Christian? If I had been raised by Buddhists or by Muslims, what kind of person would I be? What happens if I die right now? What is the point of life? Needless to say, these are the kind of things that always hit me at 2 in the morning, so I would just lay there wide-eyed until dawn just thinking "Whoa, man."

Students undermined by recent Senate resolution

Editor,

As an active member of Goodnow Hall's Hall Governing Board and the Association of Residence Halls, I felt insulted and undermined after reading the article in the Collegian on Friday regarding the passage of a resolution by Student Senate involving the residence halls' meal plan. Personally, I have no opinion on which meals are served in the dining centers but feel that it is not Senate's job to start making resolutions on what the senators feel should happen in the residence halls. The proper way to handle this would have first been to bring this idea up at a hall governing board meeting or at the Association of Residence Hall meetings. This is an important topic that must be thoroughly discussed and cannot be rushed to be implemented by fall 1999. And if this was such an important issue, it should have been brought up in fall 1998.

Many of my friends in Goodnow Hall are informed about what is happening on campus and were surprised when they read this article because it was out of the blue. The article made it sound like all the residents were in favor of it, but at least here in Goodnow, it has never been discussed as far as I am aware of.

With Student Senate elections occurring this week, we might want to make sure that the people we vote for are not going to start passing resolutions telling other organizations what they recommend should happen. First, just ARH gets resolutions, but then Senate will start branching out to pass resolutions for all other organizations on campus.

Religion found through soul searching, not lightning bolts

I realize this is some pretty deep stuff. This is probably not something you really care to think about all that often. That is the problem. Whether you believe in my God or not, you need to take a hard look at what you believe in and why. I realized that this is what I needed to do.

A conversation with someone revealed to me that some people think you can think too much about this stuff. After all, there are so many other fun things in life, like parties, the opposite sex and beer. Well, I would rather be on the safe side than be a person who never examines oneself.

Now, I realize college is the perfect place to find religion, or at least try to. Most of us are on our own for the first time. It is a time to experiment with brand new things. Now is the time we will begin to set the patterns we will follow for the rest of our lives. Your parents or guardians aren't here to force you to attend church. It is your choice. College is all about discovering yourself and your path in life.

For me, it is like an old adage I heard in Sunday school. There were two guys who built these houses, one on sand and one on rock. The guy who built his house on sand was pretty upset to discover sand isn't a great place to have a house, while the rock man had a wonderful foundation. The point was religion is a foundation for all of our lives. We need something solid to build on, or we are bound to topple.

As a kid, I always pictured my God as an old man with a long, white, flowing robe that went really well with his long, white, flowing beard. He didn't seem like a mean God, but I am sure with all the turmoil we have going on here, it is very possible he could be up there with a bunch of lightning bolts, chalking them like pool cues and saying, "And they thought Kansas got hot in August?" I hope this isn't true, but who knows?

If you are an ant Christian, in no way let this offend you. For me, my little soul searching made me believe there is a God. For you, that search might lead you to believe there is not, and if you are comfortable with that, who is some college freshman to question you?

Recent events in the world scare me. Antarctica is melting at a rate so fast that scientists predict George Strait was wrong, and eventually, we will have some oceanfront property here in Kansas; threats of military action are spreading like wildfire over the globe; and the fact that William Shatner and Ben Folds Five got together to do an album all point me to the same conclusion. Maybe those guys with the signs are right. Maybe the end is near.

For me, there is no better time to find God.

Throwers earn All-American

By SARAH CRAIG
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

It wasn't quite the conclusion the K-State track and field team hoped for this weekend, when five athletes competed in the NCAA Indoor Championships.

Coach Cliff Rovelto said each athlete was capable of earning an All-America ranking, but senior Renetta Seiler and junior Anna Whitham were the only two to do so, both in the women's weight throw. Seiler placed fourth, while Whitham placed eighth.

"I didn't throw as well as I liked," said Seiler, who ranked No. 1 in her event going into the meet. "Everyone else in the competition threw a personal record, so the competition was really tough. I can say I gave it everything I had. It just wasn't my day; some days you just can't throw any farther."

Junior pole vaulter Erin Anderson was the lone Wildcat to set a personal record with her jump of 12-7 1/2, placing her ninth, just missing an All-America ranking.

"I got a personal record, so I was pretty happy with that, but I was one place out of All-American. The top eight are All-American, and that was my goal," Anderson said.

Senior Emily Diederich, who competed in the 800 meter, missed qualifying for finals by .7 seconds. Diederich said before the meet that her goal was to run a 2:06, which would probably qualify her for finals. She fell short of her goal, however, running a 2:08.51.

Rovelto said that had Diederich qualified, she might have placed in the top five.

"If Emily had made the finals, she'd probably be top five just because that's how she runs," Rovelto said. "Had we had a great meet, we could have been among the top five."

"We just missed in a bunch of places. If Erin had made one more bar, she'd be fourth or fifth. Renetta and Anna were not that far off technically from winning. We just came up a little bit shy everywhere," he said.

Senior Charles Burney was the only competitor for the K-State men's team, placing 10th in the high jump. Burney jumped 7-1 1/2, while the first place jumper jumped 7-7. Rovelto said the current NCAA high jump field is extremely competitive.

"Charles handled himself during the competition better than he ever has before at a national meet. He barely missed scoring and being an All-American," Rovelto said.

"What was probably even more impressive was that the men's high jump field right now is probably the best it's ever been, if you look at the depth of it and the quality," he said.

Seiler also competed in the shot put but did not make the finals in that event. Seiler qualified for that event during the conference meet.

Rovelto said her performance in the conference meet was above average and earned her a qualifying mark, but in the NCAA meet, she performed at her average level, which was not enough.

Baseball team boosts record with 2 wins during weekend

By MIKE VIETTI
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State returned to the diamond after a week-long layoff this past weekend and flew home with two victories in three games at the Jacksonville Greyhound Racing Club Classic to boost their record to 8-9.

On Friday, the Cats put an end to their three game losing streak with a 5-3 win over Western Michigan, highlighted by the performance of senior starting pitcher Derek Andersen (2-3), who threw the first complete game by a Wildcat in almost three years.

Two of the three runs Andersen allowed were earned, as he gave up a total of four hits while striking out seven. Andersen capped his masterful performance by retiring the last 14 batters he faced.

"He did a good job of hitting his spots," head coach Mike Clark said. "It was nice to see him put an entire game together."

"We're really encouraged that he has put together quality starts the last few times he's pitched."

From the plate, the Cats were led by senior catcher Chet Savage, who drove in three of the five K-State runs while going 2-for-4 on the day.

K-State was back on the field on Saturday and came away with a 6-3 victory over Xavier, fueled by several long ball shots from the Cat hitters.

The Wildcats led 3-2 in the fifth inning before junior second baseman Chad Tabor pounded his first homer of the season. With K-State leading 4-3 in the bottom of the eighth inning, a pair of senior outfielders, Quinn Cravens and Andy Silva, put the game out of reach with solo blasts.

In Xavier's starter Lou Witte, the Cats faced one of the best pitchers they've seen all season, Clark said.

"We did a great job against him with two outs," assistant coach Robbie Moen said. "Five of our six runs came with two outs."

Senior Brandon Peck (2-3) came on in relief of junior starter Jason Wells to earn the win. Wells left

For an off-season challenge, football players find themselves stepping onto the COURT

By CRISTY ANDERSON
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

During the off-season, many football players are stepping off the field and stepping onto the basketball court.

Two intramural basketball teams comprised of K-State football players will participate in the independent intramural basketball league tournament at the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex.

The "2's and 7's," the defending intramural basketball champions, are 6-0 on the season and played Monday night at 7 p.m. after winning in the first round of the tournament on Sunday. "Down South," who are 3-2, played at 7 p.m. Monday as well.

There are at least four or five teams of football players playing intramural basketball this year.

The 2's and 7's won all the independent intramural basketball tournaments last year, as well as claiming the all-university men's championship title.

"We would definitely love to keep the title. We had a good time last year," Ian Moses, junior offensive lineman, said. "We lost a few key players, but we also kept a few. Our first game was rough, and we have some work to do. It's just a matter of getting everyone to play together."

Key players returning to the 2's and 7's this year are Lamar Chapman, junior defensive back; Melvin Williams, freshman defensive end; and Brian Hanley, senior offensive guard.

Team member Everett Burnett, senior wide receiver, came up with the name 2's and 7's. Moses said it means peace and good luck.

Having the football players on the intramural basketball court is a positive experience for both the players themselves and the students they play with.

"I think it's great that the football players are out here," said Steve Martini, associate director of recreational services. "They have fun, and it's a break for them. It's fun for the students to play against them."

Moses said the competition is a challenge for the 2's and 7's, and they don't underestimate anybody.

"We treat it as more than just a game," Martez Wesley, sophomore wide receiver, said. "A lot of us played basketball in high school. It's more than just a pickup game. It's reliving a dream."

The football players put their own teams together. They decide who will play on their team and who will be the coach/manager. They aren't involved in any more disputes on the court than the average student, Martini said.

"In general, there are always people that have problems with the officials, whether it is an engineering student or whoever," Martini said. "By and large, I don't see the football players in any more situations than the average student. We have to keep a perspective of where intramural basketball stands in the scheme of things. It is not Big 12 or NBA."

The Rec Complex has about 350 teams playing in the intramural basketball program this year.

"I think it's great when any student comes out here, no matter who they are. I wish every student on campus would come out to play," Miller said.

Wrestling Club takes 2nd in 1st competition

■ 7 team members qualify for national tournament.

By JOSHUA KINDER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The newly formed K-State Wrestling Club team made a dent in the Southwestern Conference Feb. 27 in the conference championships at Texas A&M in College Station, Texas. It was the team's first chance at competition.

Two weeks into the team's existence, the Wildcats walked away with a second-place team finish. All seven team members who made the trip qualified for the national tournament March 12 and 13 at Richland College in Dallas.

Club president and team captain Adam Hayes said he thought nationals could be a successful endeavor for the team.

"I think we can do well at nationals," Hayes said. "We have four guys that have a chance to at least place and a couple of guys who could compete for first and second places."

"I think everyone can score some points for the team."

The Cats had four grapplers take first place finishes. Graduate student Brian Budke won the "Most Outstanding Wrestler" honor after dominating his weight bracket at 157 pounds.

Junior Chris Augustine won at 165 pounds, senior Matt Holovach won at 230 and sophomore Shawn Ward won at 285 or heavyweight.

Senior Brandon Vering finished second at 141 pounds, while sophomore Justin Fulk at 125 pounds and Hayes at 149 both took third place honors.

K-State nearly edged the top point-getter A&M, with the difference being in team size. The Aggies, who are ranked No. 3 in the nation, fielded a complete team of 11 wrestlers.

"We thought we might not do so well in the conference tournament because we only had seven guys, and we had only been practicing for two weeks," Hayes said.

"We went in there with only seven guys and second place. If we would have two more guys, we could have taken first. The only difference between the first place team and us is that they had more wrestlers."

Other teams that competed in the tournament were KU, which took third and ranks at No. 14 in the nation, LSU, Texas, and McNeese State.

George Brett's induction to Baseball Hall of Fame worth a trip to Cooperstown

To get into the Major League Baseball Hall of Fame, you have to be more than the best in baseball for a year or two. No, to get to Cooperstown, one needs to have a whole career of great seasons, a bunch of memorable performances, have never gambled on a baseball game and maybe even set a record or two.

Here beginneth my tribute to George Brett.

Consider what Brett accomplished during his stellar career:

- He batted .300 or better in 11 seasons.
- He is the only player ever to win a batting title in three different decades ('76, '80, '90).

- He scored 100 or more runs in four seasons.

- He mauled a couple of cameramen in Detroit with his crutches when they were taking pictures of him while he was hurt.

- He twice had more than 200 hits in a season and stole at least 20 bases twice.

- He hit at least 40 doubles in a season five times and had at least 10 triples four times.

- He hit at least 20 home runs eight times, despite having the burden of playing in spacious Royals Stadium, where routine homers morph into medium fly balls.

- He had at least 100 RBIs in a season four times.

- He destroyed a Minnesota Twins bathroom with his baseball bat after striking out once. He broke sinks, toilets and went through a few bats in the process. I like players with a temper.

- He won the American League MVP in 1980 and a Gold Glove in 1985.

- He batted .373 in the 1980 and 1985 World Series, despite playing the 1980 series with, um, hemorrhoids.

- He won a World Series ring in 1985. Unfortunately, I was 7 at the time and didn't watch baseball.

- He was the 18th player in major-league history to reach 3,000 hits in a career.

My clearest memory of Brett was when I was 9. I went to my first Royals game to see Brett in action live. Before the game, I ran down behind the dugout from my nosebleed seats. (This was back when the Royals were good and played to a packed house.)

Anyway, right as he came walking out of the dugout to sign autographs, the usher saw my upper-deck ticket and ordered me back up there before I could meet my idol. Sad, I know.

I firebombed that usher's house a few years back, so I don't feel so bad about it anymore. To this day, I've still never met George, but I'm selling all my blood and perhaps a few children so I can get to Cooperstown this summer to watch the induction ceremonies. Bob, the Collegian baseball analyst, has his own favorite memory of Brett.

"I remember I went to the game the day after he said he was going to retire," Bob said. "He hit two home runs that game. I was sitting in the right field stands when he hit the second homer right at me."

It was amazing. I saw a light shine down from the heavens on the ball and angelic voices were singing. But then some big, fat hairy guy behind me pushed me down and caught my home-run ball. I hope he chokes on it."

Don't cry, Bob, it'll be OK.

To close out this tribute, Bob and I have assembled five memorable moments in Brett's career.

5. August 17, 1980. Brett hit an eighth-inning double against the Toronto Blue Jays to boost his average to .401. To you non-baseball fans out there, that's REALLY good. He ended the season at .390.

4. October 11, 1985. With the Royals down two games to nothing in the best-of-seven World Series, Brett took control in game three, having singled, doubled, hit two home runs, scoring four runs and having three RBIs.

3. July 25, 1983. The Pine Tar Bat Game. At about 4:40 p.m., with the Royals trailing, 4-3, in the ninth inning against Goose Gossage, the best closer in baseball, Brett cranked a two-run home run to give the Royals a 5-4 lead. However, he was then called out by umpire Tim McClelland because there was too much pine tar on his bat. Brett then went ballistic and tried to maul everybody in sight. That's fun baseball. The American League president later reversed the ump's decision and the Royals won, 5-4.

2. October 10, 1980. Brett hit another homer off of Gossage to give the Royals its first AL pennant and its first trip to the World Series.

1. September 30, 1992. Brett hit a one-hop rocket into right field off of the Angels' Tim Lincecum to give him 3,000 hits in his career.

Congrats, George; now please lift the restraining order.

DIMAGGIO

Yet, the numbers don't account fully for his almost legendary place on the American cultural landscape, the reason Ernest Hemingway wrote about him and Simon and Garfunkel sang about him. There was something about the courtly bearing of this son of Italian immigrants that made him special.

"I would like to take the great DiMaggio fishing," the ancient Cuban fisherman says in Hemingway's "The Old Man and the Sea." "They say his father was a fisherman. Maybe he was as poor as we are and would understand."

Perhaps it was the swanky swing and classy countenance that inspired Simon and Garfunkel's lament to lost heroes in the song "Mrs. Robinson" from the movie "The Graduate."

The summer of 1941 was magical largely because of DiMaggio's 56-game hitting streak, one of baseball's most enduring records. The streak riveted a country fresh from the Depression, with war just months away, and elevated DiMaggio from baseball star to national celebrity.

He ascended to the top rank of popular culture in 1954 when he wed Marilyn Monroe, a storybook marriage that lasted less than a year and left him brokenhearted. For years after she died in 1962, DiMaggio sent roses to her grave but refused to talk about her.

A handsome man of quiet strength — unpretentious, proud and intensely private — DiMaggio embodied the kind of hero parents wanted their sons to emulate.

Though unusually shy, DiMaggio also could come across as your friendly neighbor, as he did in his later years, touting the virtues of a savings bank and Mr. Coffee on television to a generation that never saw him play. In more recent years, he devoted himself to his grandchildren and four great-grandchildren and to raising money for the Joe DiMaggio Children's Hospital in Hollywood, Fla.

DiMaggio's only child was a son, Joe Jr., from his first marriage to Dorothy Arnold, an actress he met while working on a movie, "Manhattan Merry-Go-Round," in 1937. Their marriage ended in divorce.

Cavender reached base on an error, and Tabor scored after singling earlier in the inning.

Peay answered the Cats in the bottom of the eleventh with a single run. K-State could muster only one hit the rest of the way, a single by Silva in the 11th, before senior reliever Tim Hertz (0-1) allowed the winning run to cross the plate on a wild pitch in the 14th.

"From the 11th inning on we struggled," Moen said. "We just gave away too many at-bats late in the game."

Sophomore outfielder Kasey Weishaar extended his hitting streak to 10, and he recorded his ninth multi-hit game of the season, while going 4-for-5 from the plate.

The Cats return home to face Doane on 4 p.m. Wednesday at the Eisenhower Baseball Complex in before K-State travels to Texas for a three game series starting Friday against the 10th-ranked Longhorns.

the game in the fifth inning after a collision with an Xavier player at first base.

"He has a walking cast on his leg right now because he has a high ankle sprain," Clark said. "He should be ready for the Texas series, but we'll have to wait and see."

The Wildcats hoped to return to Manhattan with a 3-0 record in the tournament, but Xavier's Austin Peay spoiled the Cats wishes, winning 9-8 in 14 innings.

Peay jumped out to an early 7-2 lead off of freshman starter Bret Reid before K-State answered with two runs in the sixth and seventh innings and a single tally in the top of the ninth to tie the game at seven.

K-State scored in the top of the 10th when sophomore third baseman Josh elections to replace the temporary board with permanent officers.

"Our goal is to be with at least 100 women, so they can begin with a sizable group to be competitive with other sororities," Robel said.

The earliest women will start moving into the house in spring 2000. Until then, possibly the only people housed there will be a housemother and maybe the chapter consultant.

The addition of another sorority to the greek system means establishing more of a balance between sororities and fraternities, including events like bidding for functions.

"If we can have another group to offer some interests, we'll reach a lot of other women and accommodate their interests," Robel said.

Another sorority is needed with the growing rush numbers and university enrollment, Roy said.

The new member classes for all the sororities are growing and chapters are becoming increasingly larger, making housing a problem. A new sorority on campus can attract women who didn't initially consider the greek system but want to be a part of something.

"I'm going to ask the night patrol to keep an eye out in case she is still moving," Johnson said. "We have security officers who will look on the main campus and the police officers will be mobile and looking around the perimeter."

"That way if she is still moving, they'll be aware of the situation and be able to call it in," he said.

Fingland said escapes from the hospital are uncommon, and happen about only once every 5 years.

lecture will be rescheduled.

Henderson said signs had been posted all over the Union and by the UPC office yesterday making students aware the lecture had been canceled. People who ordered their tickets by phone or with a credit card, mostly those from out-of-town, where called yesterday morning with the news.

"Students will be upset like we are, but these things happen," Henderson said. "We need to take things in stride and keep on going."

McBride said the same type of thing happened last semester when MTV's "Lovelace" canceled. That cancellation was because of filming with MTV.

"Most people will be upset, especially those traveling from out-of-town," McBride said Monday. "We've gotten a few calls today from those that are disappointed and will surely get some tomorrow."

McBride said Smith's injuries are not serious and he is expected to recover in a few days.

Signs direct visitors to athletic arenas, campus

By JOEY ECK
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

New road signs directing visitors to K-State have been popping up all over Manhattan and its vicinity.

Jerry Carter, director of facilities planning at K-State, said because of the road construction that has taken place on Seth Childs Road and the interstate, new signs to direct people to the university were needed.

Carter said he and Mark Taussig, university landscape architect, came up with a design recommendation they presented to the city of Manhattan and the Kansas Department of Transportation about a year ago.

Carter said the recommendation included the design and the proposed placing of the signs, and it was accepted by the city, KDOT and K-State administration.

The lower portion of the signs consists of directions to the university and is funded solely by KDOT. The top portion consists of a large Powercat logo and the university's name, which is being paid for by K-State. Taussig said the cost is close to $11,000 to date.

He said the university wanted to use something on the signs that would get people's attention without requiring them to read the whole sign.

"The Powercat is a very highly recognizable symbol with K-State," Taussig said. "We wanted the continuity of that symbol — follow the Powercat."

So far, the signs have been placed along five different routes to campus from areas such as Interstate 70, Kansas Highway 177 and U.S. Highway 24. Signs are also noticeable along Fort Riley Boulevard and Bluemont and Kimball avenues, as well as others.

Carter said the signs are beneficial to the city and the university.

"They give people coming any direction consistent signs to get information from," he said.

Taussig said most of the signs have been put up at this point, but as more construction is completed, more signs will be implemented.

"It's important that we continue this consistency," Taussig said. "We have thousands of visitors here each year. We just want to make things easier for people to get to the university."

"THE POWERCAT IS A VERY HIGHLY RECOGNIZABLE SYMBOL ... WE WANTED THE CONTINUITY OF THAT SYMBOL — FOLLOW THE POWERCAT."

McVeigh's appeal of jury misconduct denied

By LAURIE ASSEO
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Timothy McVeigh, sentenced to die for the 1995 Oklahoma City bombing that killed 168 people and injured hundreds more, lost his Supreme Court appeal Monday.

The court refused to hear McVeigh's arguments that his trial was tainted by jury misconduct and news reports that he confessed to the bombing, the worst such attack on U.S. soil.

His lawyer, Richard Burr, expressed disappointment and said, "We had hoped the Supreme Court would be able to rise above the terrible human consequences" of the case in evaluating McVeigh's appeal.

"It is so easy to say 'no' to Timothy McVeigh," Burr said.

McVeigh was convicted of first-degree murder, conspiracy and weapons-related charges in the April 19, 1995, bombing of the Alfred P. Murrah Federal Building. The bombing could be heard miles away, and T.V. screens soon were filled with stunning images of the shattered building and rescue workers looking for survivors.

A federal appeals court last fall upheld his convictions and death sentence in the deaths of eight federal law enforcement officers. Oklahoma prosecutors have said they plan to charge McVeigh with first-degree murder in state court for the deaths of the other 160 bombing victims.

McVeigh still can pursue a new round of appeals challenging the constitutionality of his federal prosecution. Under a 1996 federal law, inmates have up to a year to file for such an appeal.

The 10th U.S. Circuit Court of Oklahoma City bomber has up to a year to file new round of appeals

Appeals ruling that upheld his conviction conveyed that the rules of law might be applied on a sliding scale when the crime is unspeakable and public outrage is great.

The appeal said pretrial news reports of a purported confession by McVeigh to his lawyers created a serious threat to his fair-trial rights. Four jurors indicated in pretrial questioning that they had seen the reports.

"No such procedure should send Mr. McVeigh to his death," his appeal said.

Justice Department lawyers said the bombing "caused extraordinary harm" and that courts took "extraordinary steps" to ensure McVeigh a fair trial, including disqualifying the original judge and moving the trial to Denver.

Prospective jurors were examined thoroughly for signs of bias, and news reports never established that McVeigh actually confessed, prosecutors said.

At McVeigh's trial in 1997, prosecutors said he and co-defendant Terry Nichols carried out the bombing in revenge for the April 19, 1993, deaths of about 80 people in the siege at the Branch Davidian compound near Waco, Texas.

Prosecutors said McVeigh, now 30, chose the Oklahoma City building because he believed people responsible for the Waco siege worked there and because the building was an easy target. Nichols was convicted of conspiracy in a separate trial and sentenced to life in prison.

McVeigh is being held under maximum security at a federal prison in Florence, Colo.

A federal death row and execution chamber have been built at a prison in Terre Haute, Ind. However, the facility has not been activated, and the 19 other inmates currently under federal death sentences are being held in prisons around the country as they pursue court appeals.

McVeigh's jury misconduct allegations concerned one juror's comment to others during the trial.

An alternate juror told a court official that jurors discussed which of them would decide the case and which would serve as alternates and that one juror said, "It wouldn't be very hard. I think we all know what the verdict should be."

McVeigh's appeal said the trial judge should have questioned the juror or held a hearing on whether the juror was biased.

His lawyers also said prospective jurors should have been asked whether they had any opinions about what sentence should be imposed if he were convicted.

Otherwise, the appeal said, "We risk having an 'Oklahoma City bombing case' exception to the rule of law."

Once In A Lifetime

Sharing your engagement and wedding announcements in the Collegian the first Friday of every month

Your engagement and wedding are special moments in your life and the Kansas State Collegian wants to help you share the news with family and friends. This semester you can put your announcement with a picture in the Collegian's "Once in a Lifetime" special section for FREE.

"Once in a Lifetime" runs the first Friday of every month: Oct. 3, Nov. 6 and Dec. 4. It will resume in the spring semester with the following publication dates: Feb. 5, March 5, April 2 and May 7.

To publish your announcement, please complete the attached form and mail it or take it to Student Publications, Kedzie 103 (east of the K-State Student Union). The deadline for getting your announcement in the paper will be the Wednesday preceding the publication date.

To place a FREE engagement or wedding announcement in the Collegian, complete and submit the following form with a photo to Kedzie 103.

'HERE' AND 'THERE'

Art work by Graduate Students of Visual Arts are exhibiting their work at both the Willard Hall Art Gallery and the Manhattan Arts Center. The exhibition is titled "Here" and "There."

Grad students exhibit work

■ The Willard Hall Art Gallery and Manhattan Arts Center feature work in various media.

By GIGI MCCALL
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

This semester, students can go "here" and "there" to see graduate students' works of art.

The Graduate Students of Visual Arts at K-State are exhibiting their work at both the Willard Hall Art Gallery and the Manhattan Arts Center. The exhibits, titled "Here" and "There," are a sampling of the work of these students, said Suzanne Hale, graduate student in art and president of GSVA.

"We have people working in different media—, people in painting, graphic design, ceramics and metals," Hale said. "We like to exhibit our work so that people on campus and in the community can see what we're doing."

Hale said many graduate students try to enter their art work in national exhibits to improve their resumes and to gain experience participating in different venues, making it difficult for all of the graduates to show their work at one site. She said the exhibits this semester represent the work of 11 of the 15 graduate students in art.

Hale said there is no specific theme for the shows. The difference of the art made it difficult to arrange them accordingly but also added depth to the exhibits, she said.

Hale, an artist whose work concentrates on abstract painting, said she hopes people will take the time to view and appreciate the works on exhibit. As an artist, Hale said she hopes her work challenges its viewers.

"The kind of art I appreciate is art that doesn't have all the answers," Hale said. "I want the work I do to be visually stimulating, but I also want it to make people think. I don't want them to be easy, simple images. I want people to have to consider what they're looking at and question what they see."

Sally Thomas, a local artist who has seen both exhibits, said she found the art both impressive and interesting.

"Much of the work reflects the themes of life and death or illustrates the dualities of conceptions," she said.

Patrick Taddy, graduate student in art, said if people go to the exhibits, it should be in response to their curiosity, and he hopes all will be affected by the artwork.

"I would hope once they were there, they would feel a work had engaged them with some type of emotional or critical response," he said.

Heidi Stevens, Junction City resident, said she has seen the exhibit at the arts center and found it to be surprisingly diverse.

"I thought it was really interesting how the display mixed artistic styles and media," Stevens said. "For a relatively small show, there is art that would appeal to many different tastes."

UPC offers spring break trips for adventurers

By DIANA LEE
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Union Program Council's Outdoor Adventures Committee is offering two trips to help students get back to nature and break out of the traditional party 'til dawn spring-break trip.

"We offer these trips over break because this is an option for students who don't like the Padre thing," Paul Donovan, UPC program adviser, said. "These are really good alternatives for those students."

Outdoor Adventures is sponsoring a trip to the Grand Canyon in Arizona and to Big Bend National Park in Texas, March 20-27. All of the available spaces for the Grand Canyon trip are full, but a few remain for Big Bend.

"The Grand Canyon trip was so popular, it filled up within the first day, so we decided to have a second trip so more people would have the chance to do something like this over break," Nate Kettle, Outdoor Adventures chairman, said.

Neither of the trips will be lacking in opportunity to engage in physical activity and experience the outdoors, Kettle said. Students going to the Grand Canyon will be hiking and backpacking during the day and camping out at night.

"We also plan to stop at any of the places along the way that we have time to see," Kettle said. "I thought we could visit the Royal Gorge, the Petrified Forest and anything else anyone wants to see that we have time to stop at, since we're driving all that way."

On the Big Bend trip, adventurers will have the opportunity to hike between five and 12 miles a day, stop to take a dip in the hot springs and possibly even take part in some mountain biking.

The trips are open to skilled hikers as well as people who have not backpacked. "As long as you can drudge up a sleeping bag and pad and other personal gear, we'll provide the rest," Kettle said.

Kettle also said students who are interested in the trip but who need to rent gear should contact the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex or The Pathfinder, 304 Poyntz.

Trip sponsors also help newcomers by checking gear to see what they're planning to bring on the trip.

"I'll do a shake-down with everyone right before the trip," Kettle said. "That's where they can bring their backpacks, and I'll recommend things they haven't and things they should plan on leaving at home."

Outdoor Adventures' trips also provide students with opportunities to develop leadership opportunities.

"If someone is going to lead one of these trips who hasn't before, I go with them the first time and just hang back and help them out if any problems arise," Kettle said. "This really helps them develop leadership skills through practice, and then we're able to have more trips and a larger group of leaders to draw from."

Trip leaders are trained in first aid and CPR to ensure their preparedness in case an emergency comes up during a trip.

The Grand Canyon trip costs $200, and the Big Bend trip costs $175. The cost includes all food, transportation and first aid.

'The Other Sister' touching, comic portrayal of young love

By CORBIN H. CRABLE
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Love in the movies has never been this comical—or touching.

"The Other Sister," directed by Garry Marshall, stars Juliette Lewis as Carla Tate, a slightly mentally challenged young woman who returns to her home and her extremely wealthy family after 10 years at a special out-of-state boarding school.

While many things have changed in the world Carla knew, the one constant is the overprotective manner of her mother, Elizabeth (Academy Award winner Diane Keaton).

Carla, who wishes to have more responsibility in her otherwise sheltered life, decides to enroll in an area vocational school, where she meets Danny McMahon (Giovanni Ribisi), a slightly mentally challenged young man who has a passion for marching bands and baking cookies. It seems Carla has found a new friend—much to the dismay of her mother.

Carla takes her desire for responsibility yet another step further when she announces she wishes to move into her own apartment. After much debating between Elizabeth and Carla's father, Radley (Tom Skerritt), Carla gets her own apartment only 15 minutes away from her parents, along with frequent visits from Danny.

Amidst her sister Caroline's (Poppy Montgomery) wedding and her own realization that she is finally growing up, Carla is involved in a constant battle with her mother, all the while trying to prove she is a responsible adult who can adjust to life on her own with a boyfriend.

Another character of note is Carla's older sister Heather (Sarah Paulson), a young woman who wishes to introduce her lesbian partner to her mother. Elizabeth, treating Heather in a similar manner to Carla, ignores the issue, putting it off so it doesn't "taint" her squeaky clean image at the local country club. The addition of this situation to the movie makes Elizabeth look all the more loathsome to the audience.

Lewis and Ribisi make an altogether touching, funny pair and play off each other's lines well, especially during a scene when the two debate experimenting with sex. The two characters, with their differences and similarities, are believable to the audience, and this connection makes their situations throughout the movie more real for the audience.

The scenery throughout the movie makes the film all the more beautiful. Set in San Francisco, the viewer is treated to shots of streetcars, large bus depots and even the Palace of Fine Arts.

While the comedy of Carla and Danny's outlooks on life is abundant, the film also contains the drama of conflict within a family. Keaton's Elizabeth is a woman who the audience will love to hate, and Skerritt's Radley, a recovering alcoholic, is haunted by the ghosts of his past decisions.

Although the ending is the stereotypical happy one, the plight of Carla Tate and her desire for independence is one many people will be able to relate to—long, and full of obstacles.

When one has someone like Danny along for the ride, the road to independence doesn't seem that arduous.

House approves bill to name state fish

■ 7th-grade class project clears House by 3 votes.

By DAVID MILES
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — A class of Olpe seventh-graders reeled in its biggest catch yet as the House passed the youngsters' proposal to name the channel catfish the official fish of Kansas.

The bill was approved Monday on a vote of 66-56, just three votes more than needed for passage.

It faces murky waters in the Senate as well. But if it makes it through, Gov. Bill Graves has said he will sign it.

A Kansas history class at Olpe Junior High School hatched the plan last fall after learning Kansas did not have a state fish. The eight students sold their idea to Rep. Peggy Long, R-Hamilton, who sponsored the bill.

"The kids worked so hard on this, and the community is so involved in this," Long said after the vote.

But some legislators argued that the bill is frivolous.

Rep. John Edmonds, R-Great Bend, voiced his opposition in a poem based on Dr. Seuss' "Green Eggs and Ham":

"I do not like this 'state fish' stuff.
"I do not like official fluff.
"I do not like it in the House.

"What will be next, the Kansas mouse?"

Long said the state fish is not a trivial matter and could have a positive economic impact on Kansas.

"I personally would like to have a channel catfish lapel pin. It's the only state that would have the channel catfish named the state fish," she said.

Sen. Dwayne Umbarger, R-Thayer, is expected to champion the bill in the Senate. Chetopa, which bills itself as the "Catfish Capital of the World," is in Umbarger's district.

Senate President Dick Bond, R-Overland Park, said he has not "heard of any interest in the subject in the Senate." But he added that he would schedule debate on the matter if the Senate Federal and State Affairs Committee endorsed it.

"It should not be taken as a joke," Bond said. "I think we have time here to pay attention to children. If we don't, perhaps we shouldn't be here."

Federal and State Affairs Chairwoman Lana Oleen, R-Manhattan, said her committee will hold hearings on the bill, but she said there could be some competition. She has heard support voiced for the Topeka shiner and largemouth bass as the state fish instead, she said.

Long said she is not daunted by the likely upstream current the bill faces in the Senate.

"I think if the kids get the opportunity to testify before the committee the way that they did before the Federal and State Affairs Committee here in the House, then it's very likely that they'll get the support they need," Long said. "They're pretty convincing."

Low wages, unemployment hurt search for prison guards

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

HUTCHINSON, Kan. — Low wages and even lower unemployment in Kansas have left state correctional facilities with a shortage. The shortage is not of prisoners, but guards.

State prisons throughout Kansas are having problems hiring and retaining security officers. Prison officials blame the shortage on low unemployment, low entry-level wages and recruitment of Kansas workers by neighboring states.

"It's an issue we've been dealing with for several years," said Bill Miskell, spokesman for the Department of Corrections. "There's not a lot of latitude on the part of the institution on what it can offer. The pay plan is set by state law."

Statewide, about 5 percent of all officer positions are vacant, Miskell said. The vacancy rate climbed to as high as 10 percent at some prisons last year but has since declined. He didn't have specific numbers for each institution.

First-year officers are quitting in droves. Statewide, the turnover is nearly 26.4 percent, up from 24.9 percent in 1997.

"In light of 3-percent unemployment, yeah, we're got a tough row to hoe," Miskell said.

A survey of those leaving showed that nearly 60 percent cited pay or career advancement issues, according to a department study. Other issues included problems with supervisors, listed by nearly 25 percent, and concerns about personal safety, cited by 22 percent.

Under the state's current pay plan, entry-level correctional officers make about $18,300 a year.

That puts Kansas sixth among states with a trainee pay level, a full 25 percent behind the average pay for the other five states. Less than a dozen regional states have trainee pay levels.

Kansas ranks 13th of 20 based on the mid-range salary. Neighboring states of Colorado and Nebraska pay significantly more, while Kansas pays better than Oklahoma, Missouri, New Mexico and Texas.

"There are at least two or three other state correction facilities holding job fairs in Kansas," Miskell said. "Arizona is one and Colorado another. One difference they have is that Colorado offers a starting salary $10,000 more than in Kansas."

And the competition is not just from out of state. The Sedgwick and Shawnee County detention centers have both recruited state prison employees by offering higher wages.

A bill is pending in the Legislature to raise the starting wage of correctional officers and to guarantee continuing raises during the first three years of employment.

Meanwhile, Miskell said the department would continue targeting recent college graduates and stressing that anyone can work in a prison.

"There is a perception that in order to go into any kind of law enforcement you have to be 6 feet tall and play linebacker in high school to qualify for the job," Miskell said. "That's not the case."

"IN LIGHT OF 3-PERCENT UNEMPLOYMENT, YEAH, WE'VE GOT A TOUGH ROW TO HOE."

Scientist fired for alleged breach of security

By H. JOSEF HEBERT
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — The Energy Department fired a computer scientist at one of its most prestigious weapons labs Monday in connection with an investigation about alleged disclosure of sensitive nuclear missile technology to China in the 1980s.

The Chinese-American scientist was dismissed for failing to properly safeguard classified material and having contact with people "from a sensitive country," a department statement said.

The scientist, whose name was withheld, had worked for years at the Los Alamos National Laboratory in New Mexico and continued to work there with a security clearance well after he became a suspect in an espionage investigation in 1996.

In recent months, DOE transferred the employee from a classified work place to a less sensitive job and more recently suspended his security clearance. The department "had kept the worker employed so that the FBI could more efficiently investigate the case," according to statement.

The FBI was continuing its investigation into the alleged espionage. The scientist, while fired from his federal job as well as from a post at the University of California, has not been arrested or charged with a crime.

"The unnamed employee received notice of termination in a letter today," DOE said.

Energy Secretary Bill Richardson recommended the scientist be fired after he received a briefing on the FBI investigation, officials said.

The action came as Republicans in Congress stepped up their criticism of the administration's handling of the investigation, which began in 1996, and other security lapses at the federal weapons labs. Several GOP senators promised hearings on the subject in the coming months.

Richardson promised to cooperate fully with a Senate committee looking into allegations that lax security allowed

China to steal technology that improved its nuclear weapons capability.

"We will not tolerate the theft of our secrets," he said on CNN.

The reason for the scientist's dismissal were "failing to properly inform the laboratory and DOE about contacts with people from a sensitive country; specific instances of failing to properly safeguard classified material; and, apparently, attempting to deceive (the) laboratory about security related issues," a spokesperson from the Energy Department said.

The Los Alamos scientist has been at the center of an investigation that involves concerns by U.S. intelligence specialists that top-secret materials were given to the Chinese in the mid-1980s that helped them develop ways to build miniaturized warheads nearly a decade later.

Such technology allows development of small warheads that can be launched from a single missile at multiple targets. By the mid-1990s, China had built and tested such warheads, U.S. intelligence officials said. A secret 1988 Chinese document was uncovered in 1995 by U.S. intelligence which indicated the Chinese knew design information about the U.S. W-88 miniature warhead that had been developed at Los Alamos.

U.S. investigators immediately suspected the Chinese were helped by information provided from someone at one of the U.S. weapons labs.

By early 1996, investigators focused on five suspects and a short time later became convinced the Los Alamos computer specialist might have been involved. The New York Times reported Sunday.

Richardson said the administration was still assessing security at all of its weapons labs. DOE instituted tougher security regulations at the facilities more than a year ago.

Edward Curran, the DOE's director of counterintelligence said in a statement Sunday that it was unclear how much the Chinese weapons programs might have been helped by unauthorized procurement of sensitive information.

Study finds more aggressive driving when walking, biking aren't options

By GLEN JOHNSON
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — An environmental group contends that aggressive driving is worst in places where sprawl development and poor mass transit planning force drivers into their cars.

A survey released Monday by the Surface Transportation Policy Project, a group backed by 200 environmental groups, including several Sierra Club chapters, found that the Riverside/San Bernardino, Calif., region had the highest number of aggressive driving deaths in 1996, an average of 13.4 deaths per 100,000 people.

In a twist, the best metropolitan area was Boston, a city with a reputation for bad drivers. It had only 2.1 aggressive driving deaths per 100,000 people.

"The endless strip malls and high-speed roads we're building seem to be a breeding ground for aggressive driving," said Roy Kienitz, executive director for the group that advocates mass transit alternatives to traffic congestion.

A community like Boston, the Surface Transportation Policy Project believes, has a lower rate because it offers commuters options like the subway, commuter trains and an extensive sidewalk network.

The Riverside/San Bernardino area, by contrast, is near Los Angeles, a region with few mass transit options, overcrowded freeways and a tradition of driving vast distances, the project says.

Vice President Al Gore put the administration's stamp on the report, citing it during a news conference.

"Nationwide today, men spend an average of 84 minutes per day behind the wheel. Women spend an average of 64 minutes per day behind the wheel, and that can lead to some frustrated moments," Gore told 20 traffic reporters invited to Washington for the event.

Gore urged the Federal Communications Commission to establish a national "N11" hotline — using the numbers 211 or 511 — that would give drivers immediate transportation and traveler information, such as road conditions and bus schedules.

The aggressive driving report was criticized by The Road Information Program. The Washington road-building group noted a recent AAA survey in which motorists said aggressive driving is triggered by congestion and slow-moving traffic — evidence of the need to build more roads.

Since 1970, the group said, highway travel has increased by 130 percent while new road mileage has increased by only 5 percent.

"If traffic is growing at more than 24 times the rate of increased capacity, the net result is going to be increased congestion," said William Wilkins, head of The Road Information Program.

The Surface Transportation Policy Project's report was based on its analysis of 1996 fatal accident reports, the most recent available. Like the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration, the group defined aggressive driving as speeding, tailgating, failing to yield and improper passing, among other factors.

It eliminated accidents in which drugs or alcohol were a factor. For speeding crashes, it included only those involving speeds over 80 mph. The group then compared the accidents' locations with urbanized areas over 1 million in population, as defined by the U.S. Census Bureau.

WHAT THE VOTERS ARE SAYING

"I looked for the issues that made the most sense and the candidates who could make short-term changes that would affect the university in the long term."

— Allison Penner, junior in pre-occupational therapy

"I was really impressed by all the candidates. It's been better than past years. I listened to them at Golden Key, and they all had really great ideas."

— Rebecca Lorsch, junior in hotel and restaurant management

"It's good to see so many people wanting to get involved and better our university."

— Kellie McClellan, junior in public relations

"There were almost too many candidates running. It was good in a way, but it made voting tougher and longer."

— Ashley Swift, junior in psychology

"Articles in the newspaper and the forum held in the Union helped me make my decision."

— Damon Gardner, senior in computer science

"I thought that the candidates who I voted for had a better grasp on the issues."

— Hannah Applequist, junior in microbiology pre-medicine

"I agreed with most of what the candidates who I voted for said. Even if I didn't agree with them on something, they were very passionate about what they believe in."

— Dale Schowengerdt, senior in English and political science

"Parking was my major concern. I figured that more candidates would talk about it, but only a couple did and that was kind of disappointing."

— Ryan Fisher, senior in manufacturing systems engineering

Elections end tonight

By KELLE MILLER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Student Governing Association's polls will close today, and students still wanting to cast their vote can do so before 7 p.m.

Election Chair Joe Ashley said election results will be posted by 10 p.m. on the windows of the Office of Student Activities and Services.

He said candidates will receive a phone call from the Election Committee telling them if they won or lost. The committee also will visit each presidential and vice presidential candidate's election party to inform them of the results.

"We wanted to make it more personable — more user-friendly," Ashley said.

Voting commenced Monday, and Ashley said the ballots have been said continuously sent to Computing and Network Services on Monday and Tuesday for tabulation. The committee also will be tabulating the write-in candidates from the ballots tonight. He said it will not receive any ballot results until tonight.

Ashley said the first day of voting was slow mainly due to the bad weather, but Tuesday was more steady and he expects today to be the same.

Student Body President Tracey Mann said he thought voter turnout would be higher this year because of the increase in candidates.

"I think with so many candidates, especially for Student Senate, I think it will be way higher," he said.

Presidential and vice-presidential candidates must receive more than 50 percent of the vote to win, Ashley said. If no one receives a majority vote, there will be a runoff election between the two presidential tickets that receive the most votes. Runoff voting will take place Monday.

"With so many tickets, I'm betting on it, but it's not a foregone conclusion," Ashley said.

Mann said election night is a once-in-a-lifetime experience — win or lose. "It's a thousand different emotions at once," he said. "On the one hand, you are nervous about the outcome, and on the other you are really at peace and are excited to be done."

"Candidates are going all-out for a month and are just relieved to have it almost over."

Mann said it's an incredible feeling on election night, waiting with friends for the results.

"Huge sense of joy to have all your friends and supporters together — it's humbling," he said.

Mann said he felt the elections have gone well this year.

"I think the candidates have put their best leg forward," he said. "I'm excited for K-State. I think whoever is elected will do an excellent job."

Mann said he was pleased with the number of candidates who filed for president. Seven presidential tickets filed this year.

"It really encouraged me that so many people think this office can affect so many people," he said.

Regent chair 'could' support plan

By LEW FERGUSON
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — Regents Chairman Bill Docking and Washburn University President Jerry Farley said Tuesday they could support a new Senate plan to restructure the way the state colleges and universities are managed if some changes are made first.

Docking questioned the increased work load the plan would impose on a restructured nine-member Board of Regents, and said he doubted that dividing the board into three-member sub-boards would work.

The plan also needs to address community colleges' concerns about how they are funded, Docking said.

He said the bill should be changed to give the new Board of Regents full responsibility for overseeing the state's six universities, Washburn, 19 community colleges and 11 vocational schools and technical colleges. The board could then divide itself into committees to do the work.

Farley's main concern was who would be responsible for running Washburn, the nation's only municipal university. It receives some state funding but relies heavily on a local Topeka property tax and tuition for support.

Under the plan, Washburn would be under the Board of Regents for coordination and budgeting, but it would retain its own Board of Trustees for governance.

"There is a clear potential for conflict if a board governs one set of institutions and attempts to coordinate another," Farley said. The overlapping duties of the new board and the Washburn board "creates an intolerable conflict," he said.

Docking, of Arkansas City, and Farley, who is in his second year as president of Washburn, were the first witnesses to testify before the Senate Education Committee on a bill to reorganize higher education governance. The committee will hear from others Wednesday and Thursday.

Both Farley and Docking had positive things to say about the plan.

Docking said the bill to create a system of coordination under a revamped Board of Regents contains "all necessary elements for improved coordination."

But he said the plan for three sub-boards — which drafters of the measure call "derivative boards" — suggests "kind of a model of what is going on in Bosnia."

"I don't know that it would work that way, but I think there is the potential," he said.

"We're very strongly supportive of this concept," Farley said of the

The United States has a remarkably strong framework and structure because of the efforts of the founding fathers and its strong leaders, but Russia continues to be a threat to the United States, former U.S. Sen. Howard Baker Jr. said Tuesday at the 113th Landon Lecture Series presentation in McCain Auditorium.

Audience members filled the lower level of McCain Auditorium to hear Baker speak. He attributed the country's strong economy and government to the work of the founding fathers.

"I think it's very unlikely that our intelligent young founding fathers in the ending part of the 18th century could have understood how relevant the structures of government they gave us would be in the 20th and 21st centuries," Baker said.

K-State president Jon Wefald introduced Baker at the presentation. Baker has served many political positions, such as chief of staff under President Reagan and majority leader of the Senate, and now serves on several corporate foundation boards. He received a law degree from the University of Tennessee, where he also was

Nabisco will shed international tobacco business

By SKIP WOLLENBERG
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — RJR Nabisco Holdings Corp., the food-and-tobacco conglomerate whose brands include Camels and Winstons, Oreo cookies and Ritz crackers, is getting out of the cigarette business.

RJR said Tuesday it will sell its international tobacco business to Japan's biggest tobacco company for $7.8 billion and spin off its domestic tobacco operations as a separate company.

The moves come amid rising legal challenges to cigarettes and falling numbers of U.S. smokers — something tobacco opponents were quick to note.

"The tobacco industry is in deep trouble," said Ahron Leichtman, executive director of Citizens for a Tobacco-Free Society.

RJR said its aim is merely to help the cigarette and food companies achieve greater success as separate entities.

The $17 billion conglomerate has been under pressure for several years from primary stockholders to separate its food and tobacco businesses because the tobacco is considered a drag on RJR's stock. Some investors won't put their money in any company that has tobacco holdings, out of either opposition to smoking or fear that lawsuits will hurt profits.

The breakup doesn't entirely solve the problem, because RJR can be hit with tobacco lawsuits even after it has shed its cigarette business.

Carl Icahn, the corporate raider who owns 7.7 percent of RJR stock, had threatened to launch a fight for control of the board of directors to force a separation. He did not return calls for comment Tuesday.

His 25 million shares grew in value slightly as RJR Nabisco stock rose 12 1/2 cents to $28.75 a share in trading on the New York Stock Exchange. Nabisco Holdings — which trades as a separate stock even though RJR owns 80.6 percent of it — closed up 3 1/4 cents at $44.93 3/4 a share.

RJR Nabisco was created during the mid-1980s when the R.J. Reynolds tobacco company bought the food company Nabisco Brands.

RJR's international tobacco business is a distant third to Philip Morris Co. and British-American Tobacco, and its earnings have fallen amid financial turmoil in its key Russian and Asian markets. It will be sold to the Japan Tobacco Co.

"The deal will allow us to secure a base for future growth overseas and establish us as a global player," Japan Tobacco said in a statement.

After the sale, RJR will spin off its domestic tobacco operations to RJR shareholders. The tobacco business will revert to its old name — R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co. — and retain its headquarters in Winston-Salem, N.C.

The resulting RJR Nabisco basically will be a food company, with such products as Chips Ahoy! and SnackWell's cookies, Lifesavers candy and Planters nuts.

"We believe that the food and tobacco businesses will be best able to achieve their full potential under separate ownership structures," RJR chairman and chief executive Steven F. Goldstone said.

If RJR had tried to spin off its food assets instead, it probably would have been accused

Owner finds escaped bison early Tuesday

■ Heifer calf found resting among trees after escaping Monday night.

By JOE HURLA
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The 550-pound bison that escaped from the Veterinary Medicine Complex on Monday was captured Tuesday morning.

The 8-month-old female calf was captured at about 9:30 a.m., after spending about 14 hours on the loose.

The bison's owner, Dan Martin, fourth year student in veterinary medicine, said he located the bison without any trouble.

"She was exactly where I thought she'd be," Martin said. "She had gotten into some trees and then just laid down."

Martin discovered the escapee east of the veterinary college, on a hill he said was known as "research hill." After locating it, he called for a group of about 25 students and staff to assist him in its capture.

"We formed a human fence to scare her back up the hill, in case she decided to run," Martin said. "We finally got her back into the pen."

Martin said the bison was brought into captivity when the group scared it into a corral, then backed a trailer up to the corral.

He said the bison went into the trailer without putting up any fight.

Roger Fingland, vet-med hospital director, said the capture went well, considering the animal they were trying to catch.

"I'm not sure anything happened smoothly when we're dealing with bison, but it went as smoothly as could be expected," Fingland said. "Bison don't do anything without a fight."

Martin said during the entire escapade, he never considered the bison a threat to anyone's safety.

"She's rambunctious, but she's really not capable of causing too much damage," Martin said.

"Some people were afraid she'd head for the city of Manhattan," he said. "But I knew she'd look for somewhere quiet. She's a naturally wild animal, and they tend to shy away from the city lights."

The bison's escape can be traced back to human error, Martin said.

"One of the students just mis-set the gate," he said. "It was an honest mistake, and she just decided to take a walk."

Martin said he didn't plan on making any procedural changes to prevent future recurrences. There is no failure in protocol that resulted in this animal escaping," Martin said. "This happens."

Investigation continues into death of Manhattan man

Authorities are investigating suspicious circumstances surrounding the death of a Manhattan man at a local tavern early Tuesday morning.

Thomas G. Hammes, 822 Elliot St., was found face-down in the parking lot of My Place Tavern, 601 N. 3rd St., around 12:11 a.m. No witnesses were present at the time of Hammes' collapse.

Riley County Police arrived to find Hammes unresponsive as an employee from the tavern gave him CPR. He was taken by ambulance to Mercy Health Center on College Avenue, where he was later pronounced dead.

Sources at the tavern said Hammes, 50, was a regular at My Place. He had been drinking there prior to collapsing in the parking lot, where he was found by two brothers.

Officials still are investigating the cause of Hammes' death. Sources at Mercy have reported the incident was not vehicle-related and it was possible he died from coronary failure. They said Tuesday that an autopsy would need to be done to determine the cause of death for certain.

Authorities at RCPD still were waiting on the results of the autopsy late Tuesday.

Asbury denies seeking jobs at San Diego State, Nevada

MANHATTAN — K-State basketball coach Tom Asbury has denied that he has been actively pursuing other jobs.

His name had been linked to job openings at San Diego State and Nevada.

"There are currently several rumors out there that I have had contact with San Diego State about their coaching vacancy," Asbury said Monday. "I am happy at Kansas State and am not actively pursuing any other opportunities."

Asbury said he was fearful the rumors would affect recruiting efforts for next year.

At the Big 12 Tournament, Asbury was asked whether the tournament would be his final game at K-State. He said, "Not unless they fire me."

K-State is playing in its second-straight NIT. The Wildcats are host to Texas Christian tonight.

Asbury coached K-State to a 20-12 record this season, his most wins at the school. It is the third time in five seasons that Asbury has taken a team into post-season play.

Newton teen-ager charged with fatally shooting friend

NEWTON, Kan. — A Newton teen-ager has been charged with fatally shooting a friend with a rifle purchased the same day at a gun show, authorities said. Brian Krotz, 18, was charged Tuesday with second-degree murder, Harvey County Attorney Mary McDonald said. The charge alleges reckless conduct, she said.

Krotz has been held in the Harvey County Jail since Saturday night, when Newton High School senior Daniel P. Trail was shot in the head.

Trail, 18, had gone with Krotz and other friends earlier Saturday to a gun show at the Kansas Coliseum near Wichita, where they bought several rifles. Although handgun purchases require a waiting period, rifles can be brought home the same day, Newton police Lt. Randy Stults said.

Shortly before midnight Saturday, police were alerted to a shooting at a home occupied by a friend of Trail. Emergency medical personnel pronounced Trail dead at the scene.

Four people were outside the home when police arrived, including Krotz. They told officers that the rifle with which Trail was shot was one of the weapons they had bought at the gun show, Stults said.

Krotz remained jailed Tuesday on $75,000 bond.

Fire department scrutinized for allegedly watching porn

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — The Kansas City Fire Department is under scrutiny again, this time after a report of on-duty dispatchers watching a pornographic video on Super Bowl Sunday.

Sources familiar with the case said a supervisor dropped by the communications center about noon Jan. 31 and saw a sexually explicit video on a television dispatchers normally use for watching training videos and monitoring weather and news.

After the dispatchers' supervisor raised the issue, Deputy Chief Pat Gilchrist conducted a preliminary hearing last week and decided to investigate further. Fire Department spokesman Brad Humston said.

The department recently gained attention after a fire truck was used for an exotic dance club's calendar, and in 1997 a federal court jury found against the department in a harassment lawsuit.

Dispatchers send firefighters to accidents, fires and medical emergencies. Officials have not suggested that the alleged viewing had any adverse effect on public safety or in any way delayed dispatching of emergency crews.

Viewing pornographic videos at the alarm office would violate the department's "Sexual Harassment and Inappropriate Sexual Conduct Policy," which bars employees from taking sexually explicit videos onto city property and viewing them.

Survey finds 1 in 4 suffers lasting effects from movies

DETROIT — If "Jaws" scared you out of the water or "Psycho" changed your shower habits, a study suggests you probably aren't alone.

A survey of 150 students at the Universities of Michigan and Wisconsin found that one in four had some lingering "fright" effect from a movie or TV show seen as a child or a teen-ager.

Some people who saw the thriller about a man-eating shark never went into the ocean again, said Kristen Harrison, a University of Michigan communications professor who co-wrote the study.

And "Psycho?" "There are people who shower with the door open, even though they're quite sure there isn't a killer in the house," Harrison said Tuesday.

Ninety percent said they were scared by a TV show or movie from their childhood or adolescence; 26 percent said they still experience residual anxiety.

The younger the children were when they were frightened, the longer the reaction lasted.

Ranny Levy, president of the Coalition for Quality Children's Media in Santa Fe, N.M., said her own 27-year-old son was frightened of taking a swim in the sea a few years ago and blames it on seeing "Jaws" as a boy.

"He had to force himself. He really identified it with watching 'Jaws' when he was little," she said.

67-year-old shoots daughter to stay out of nursing home

ORLANDO — A 67-year-old woman who is blind in one eye and has emphysema shot and critically wounded her daughter after overhearing talk of putting her in a nursing home, investigators said.

Shirley Ann Egan also allegedly tried to shoot her daughter's boyfriend

Monday and was charged with two counts of attempted murder.

Egan became upset when she overheard her daughter talking about taking her to a nursing home, Sheriff's Detective Riggs Gay said.

The daughter, Georgette Smith, 42, was shot in the head.

Professor recognized for teaching, research

■ Martin's award is the 3rd in 5 years for K-State's College of Agriculture.

By LORI OLEEN
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Being recognized as one of the best teachers in the country has been humbling for one K-State professor.

"I just try to do my job, and I care about the students, but there are a lot of people who care about students," said Linda Martin, associate professor of animal sciences and industry. "I'm lucky because there are a lot of very talented people who don't get recognition."

Martin was one of two people in the nation to receive the honor recognizing faculty who excel in the classroom, research and outreach programs. Awards are sponsored by the U.S. Department of Agriculture and the National Association of State Universities and Land-Grant Colleges.

"My department nominated me and helped me put together the packet that went to the dean's office, including letters from current students, former students, faculty within the department, as well as peers around the United States," she said.

Martin traveled to Atlanta in November to receive the award. Regional awards also were presented at the gathering.

"This is the College of Agriculture's third national winner over the last five years. Two of those years we have also had regional winners," Larry Erpelding, associate dean of agriculture, said.

Teaching in an atmosphere where undergraduate teaching and advising is a priority makes her job easier, Martin said.

"I look at teaching as if I'm a student of good teaching, and I watch those who have been here longer or had more experience," she said. "I feel lucky to be recognized, but when I look around, it's humbling because I am surrounded by true master teachers."

Besides teaching genetics and animal breeding, Martin advises about 100 undergraduate students. She also is a faculty adviser for two K-State student groups and is active in many professional associations.

"She has an excellent reputation for helping students be successful and gain the maximum amount of information from her classes," Erpelding said. "She is highly sought after to serve as an adviser for various campus groups as well."

Martin's enthusiasm for teaching is apparent to students.

"It was easy to see — even from the first day of class — that she loves her job," said Katy Morton, senior in animal sciences and industry. "She has a thorough teaching style and really takes the time to go the extra mile to help students understand."

Martin joined the K-State faculty in 1988.

"There's no doubt when looking at Linda's record, one would find a very caring individual who has worked hard at being a student of the teaching and learning process," Erpelding said.

Enthusiasm for the subject matter and staying excited is critical for good teaching, she said.

"I don't think there's a magic formula," Martin said. "I think you just have to have a genuine concern for students, and teach within the framework of your own personality."

Huerta fights 'racist cancer' in U.S.

Speaker says everyone should commit to change

By SARAH BAHARI
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Racism is still a problem in the United States, said Dolores Huerta, who spoke in Forum Hall on Tuesday about racism, sexism and activism as part of the American Ethnic Studies Lecture Series.

Huerta, co-founder with Cesar Chavez of the United Farm Workers of America, said racism is still alive in the United States.

"We have not overcome this racist cancer," she said. "It will not happen until we have a healing. If we keep moving at this rate, it will take 300 years to achieve equality."

Huerta said minorities need to be paid back for their contributions to this country.

"Have we ever paid back Native Americans?" she asked. "They have the highest poverty rate, highest suicide rate and the highest infant mortality rate, and we're living on their land."

Huerta said she doesn't know when the racism will finally end, and each person needs to make a commitment to ending racism and sexism. It will be difficult to enter the 21st century without changes, she said.

"You would think it would just come to an end," she said. "Young people would come out and just not be prejudiced. But instead, we have these neo-Nazis that have their headquarters in Lincoln, Nebraska."

Huerta said women do not have a support system for themselves, and that women often face adversity from males when wanting to enter the workforce. "Women need to be involved in policy-making decisions," she said. "Women need to have their own support system, but families need women at home to be their support system."

Four to six percent of all corporate jobs belong to women and minorities, she said. Women are 52 percent of the population and make up 17 percent of the U.S. Congress and nine percent of the Senate, Huerta said.

Huerta said it is time to end stereotypes of women. She said each male should take a women's studies class to become more aware of issues facing women today.

Women do not want to dominate men, Huerta said. She said men should be as involved in housework as women and should learn to take care of themselves.

"Women are not sex objects," she said. "Right now, as I say this, a woman is being battered because some man thinks he owns her body. A woman owns her own body."

Huerta emphasized the importance of personal contributions to bettering society.

She said changes come from the bottom, not the top.

"Everyone needs to be part of this civil rights movement," she said. "The most important thing to learn in college is political activism."

Juanita McGowan, director of American Ethnic Studies, said Huerta does not lose sight of the common person as she continues her plight for equity and justice. She said Huerta teaches students the importance of being an activist.

"What she teaches each of us is the beauty of activism," McGowan said. "She shows us how we can come together to support one another."

Fans should support K-State's NIT effort

As March Madness begins to spread throughout the basketball-loving world, many sports enthusiasts are already filling out their brackets and planning their vacation time at work so they can watch perhaps the most exciting time of the year unfold.

Unfortunately, the K-State men's basketball team doesn't get the chance to fulfill its dreams as one of the 64 teams appearing in the NCAA tournament.

Instead, the Wildcats settle for an National Invitation Tournament bid and will get set to play Texas Christian University tonight at 8 p.m.

Although the likes of Duke and UConn seem much more appealing when it comes to basketball this year, the K-State Wildcats have worked hard this season and deserve just as much attention as the Tar Heels or the Wildcats of Kentucky in postseason play.

The NIT might not have the same status as the Final Four, but it is still a respected tournament, and each team is proud to still be playing basketball.

Unlike half of the teams in the NIT bracket, K-State will be playing the first round at home and looking forward to beating TCU in front of a packed crowd.

Now we all know of K-State's attendance records this year, but realize this might very well be the last chance to ever see a Manny Dies' slam dunk or a Shawn Rhodes' three-pointer.

Even though Wildcat faithful might not be happy with the program all the time, we have still watched these seniors and several others grow up before our eyes and keep the Wildcat basketball tradition alive.

With the tickets being only $5 for students, the NIT first round will be an affordable thriller. It might not be the Final Four, but with TCU being very competitive and the Wildcats coming off a hot streak from the Big 12 Tournament, Bramlage Coliseum will be an exciting place to watch top-notch basketball on Wednesday night.

So, drop those NCAA tournament brackets and support the K-State Wildcats as they continue their postseason dreams.

I'd like to commend the K-State men's and women's basketball teams for the great season they had.

I think if there's going to be an increase in the cost of tuition or privilege fees, and that money's going to go to the library, I think there needs to be an effort to make the library more user-friendly.

I got a message for Tom Asbury. Now that your K-State career is over, my 6-and-under team needs a coach. The pay's not that great, but you get a free T-shirt.

Now that it's March Madness, I think the Union needs to buy some more TVs so we can watch the games during the day. Last year, I tried to watch a game, and I had to skip class for it. That's not very educational.

I think K-State and the campus need to get some more recycling bins, because it's almost the millennium, and we're running out of resources.

Rather than squandering our tuition on something stupid like a library, I think it would be a good idea for us to invest a little bit more money in shoes for the bowling alley.

Did the Collegian lose its cojones, or did it just decide to subscribe to the SGA's do-nothing policies by not endorsing a candidate for student body president?

Who better to beat than Billy T.? Let's have a big turnout Wednesday, as well as Wednesday night for the women versus Creighton.

I just want to thank Ken Wells for an honest, straightforward and accurate article concerning the symptoms of cancer, and specifically ovarian cancer.

Serve the Campus. Be Creative

Candidates need to ignore building résumés, focus on simple improvements to K-State

GUYTON

This is the last day of elections. If you haven't voted by now you probably won't. Either way you won't hurt my feelings.

However, I think voting is a healthy habit to get into. I realize that most of us live outside of our home voting districts, but that is still no reason not to flex your democratic muscles every so often. This is your big chance to vote in an election, and there is absolutely no way to screw it up. What's the worst that can happen? Student body presidents don't get interns, and they don't handle enough money to make stealing worthwhile.

What exactly do the senators and president do that earn all the hubbub? This is a question I want answered before next year. I know what they think they do, but what do they do, really?

They quit making this fun a long time ago. Back in the day of more, ahem, colorful candidates, we were promised all types of fun stuff for our votes. A bass pond in Memorial Stadium and a petting zoo in front of Willard Hall have both been past campaign platforms. We need more of this kind of creative thinking in our upper levels of government.

What does this current crop of candidates have to offer us? Parking? Privilege fees? Blah.

These issues come up every year, and nothing changes. People meet, studies are done, money is shuffled around, and at the end of the term everything is as it was.

Face it. We have a bunch of résumé builders running our government, and I, for one, am sick of it.

So, these are my suggestions for platforms that voters honestly and truly care about. Take note for next year, you future candidates.

1. The Union. Make it bigger, make it smaller, just don't meddle with the food. I think I speak for a large part of this campus when I say most of my nourishment comes from the Stateroom. It's sort of like eating at home, and after a while, you come to expect certain things. Breakfast being the most important meal of the day, I will vote for the first candidate to guarantee biscuits and gravy and sausage-egg-and-cheese sandwiches every morning.

And the nice breakfast ladies should get a generous pension.

2. Privilege fees. If I'm paying a privilege fee, I want some real privileges. End lab fees for art, architecture and engineering majors. It's like paying tuition twice, and it sucks.

3. The eternal parking question. Free parking anywhere after 5 p.m., with the exception of handicapped spots, would be real nice. Never in the history of time has a delivery person or campus official visited this university after 5. With this in mind, I suggest the removal of all 24-hour reserved stalls. (I'm not just saying this because I got a ticket at 2 a.m. in a 24-hour spot. Really.)

4. Something fun. If you are lucky enough to get elected, then you owe us something fun. I don't mean a concert; I mean something really good. A monkey house would be cool. Roving teams of back-massagers on Monday mornings. Free milk and cookies on odd-numbered days. A waterslide in place of Denison Hall. You get the idea.

These are just four points, but they are important points. They deal with quality of life and overall happiness of the constituents. So next year, the candidate with the creativity and tenacity to tackle just a couple of these will have my wholehearted endorsement.

Power to the people.

Logo use would cause NCAA chaos

TROTTER

Imagine these two scenarios.

Today the K-State men's basketball team hits the floor of Bramlage Coliseum for warmups before the opening round of the NIT. The backs of their warmup jackets have huge Burger King logos on them. After Shawn Rhodes, Chris Griffin and the other starters remove their jackets, a smaller Burger King logo is noticeable next to the black patch in memory of the late Jack Hartman.

Next fall Aaron Lockett catches a touchdown pass in the north end zone where the Powercats in each corner have been replaced by Harrah's Prairie Band Casino logos. After the game at the press conference, coach Bill Snyder rattles off slogans like "Yo quiero Taco Bell" or "Snickers: Not going anywhere for a while?" before every question he answers.

These scenarios, although extreme, could happen if U.S. District Judge Thomas Van Bebber rules in favor of Adidas America Inc., in its antitrust lawsuit against the NCAA.

Last week, the NCAA presented its final written arguments to Judge Van Bebber. Adidas is suing the NCAA over the rules on corporate logos and trademarks.

Rule 12.5.5 is an NCAA bylaw that was created in the 1980s because of Georgetown's Patrick Ewing (the same man who was head of the players' union during the NBA lockout). Ewing had a visible Nike logo on a T-shirt that he wore under his jersey and the NCAA didn't like it.

The rule is called "Use of Logos on Equipment, Uniforms and Apparel." It limits uniforms to one logo that is smaller than 2-1/4 square inches.

If Adidas America Inc. wins the lawsuit, who knows what could happen to collegiate sports teams?

Picture Josh Cook of the men's golf team teeing-off on the 18th hole of Colbert Hills Golf Course in a shirt so littered with logos that it looks more like NASCAR champion Jeff Gordon's No. 24 car. Afterward, head coach Tim Norris thanks the title sponsors of the First Annual Pepsi One/Golf Digest Colbert Hills Invitational.

In some ways the commercialization of college athletics has already started. For example, what bowl games has K-State been to in the past six years? The Weiser-Lock Copper Bowl, Jeep Eagle Aloha Bowl, Plymouth Holiday Bowl, Southwestern Bell Cotton Bowl, Tostitos Fiesta Bowl and the Builder's Square Alamo Bowl. Too bad we've missed out on the Poulan Weedator Independence Bowl.

What if this epidemic spread to the whole university? Picture the fully commercialized and corporate-sponsored version of K-State.

On a warm, sunny morning, President Jon Wefald crawls out of bed and gazes across campus at the Golden Arches of McDonald's popping out the top of historic Anderson Hall. McDonald's is now the title sponsor of the college. Ronald and his hamburger-flipping buddies helped pay for an upgrade of Hale Library and are now our No. 2 source of funding, behind only the state taxpayers.

All of the K-State facilities vans and trucks have Valvoline logos on both sides. The K-State Open House is sponsored by Pepsi One and Lay's Potato Chips. The College of Engineering is owned by Hardee's, because "If you're going to go, go all out." A professor, whose salary is paid by Calvin Klein, flunks a student who consistently wears Ralph Lauren Polo shirts.

Homecoming is run by MTV, which closes the week-long festivities with the Backstreet Boys in a Battle of the Bands contest against N'Sync. The National Arbor Day Foundation owns advertising space on every tree on campus. Coors purchased all the drinking fountains in the buildings. They charge $1 for one minute of Coors Light flowing out of the fountain.

Even graduation could be commercialized. It could be sponsored by "Star Wars: The Phantom Menace." Anyone who attends the commencement ceremonies and brings a ticket stub from the movie receives a free foam hand that reads "My Grad is #1!"

I hope that Judge Van Bebber rules in favor of the NCAA for the sake of all college sports. Someone needs to do something to control corporations from sponsoring everything.

But, on second thought, it would be funny to go to Wagner Field to watch the K-State/McDonald's Fry Guys play the KU/Lay-Z-Boy Raccoons.

Women's basketball needs equal treatment in paper

Editor,

I have a quick question. Why is it that the only team that you list as deserving praise is the men's basketball team? What about the women's team? They had an amazing season of winning games they were not supposed to and continuing their season into the upcoming WNIT.

Why is the women's team treated like a second-class team? Many times it is almost impossible to find information about a game that they won while the men lose their game and they get all of the headlines.

I believe that if the Collegian is going to move into the next century properly then it needs to understand that both genders are involved in athletics at the varsity level. Please make some of these changes so that I can be proud as an alumnus to show the Collegian to future students who happen to be female athletes.

student body president. Baker married former Sen. Nancy Landon Kassebaum Baker in 1996.

He visited K-State in 1979 to deliver a Landon Lecture speech. In that speech Baker stressed the importance of voting and participating in political processes, on which he elaborated in Tuesday's speech.

"It's only in that way that we are assured of choosing men and women of caliber to deal with these cataclysmic issues," he said.

Baker, who served three years in the U.S. Navy during World War II, said that as the presidential elections are drawing near, people must rely on the character of their leaders and on their abilities to judge them before they elect them.

"We need to pick somebody who can lead the country with vigor," he said. "We're looking for someone with a clear view of what they want to do for the country."

Baker listed five criteria that a good leader should have. He said a leader should be genuine and honest and should live up to what the country expects after being elected. He also said leaders must know exactly who they are.

"He is the leader of the free world, and he or she will not succeed if there is difficulty comprehending and accepting the enormity of these responsibilities," Baker said.

Baker said leaders' beliefs should be well-defined and firmly held. He said leaders also must know where they want to lead the country and that they must choose their goals well, but they should choose only the things they think they can accomplish.

Finally, Baker said leaders must understand that we live in a dangerous place and in a dangerous time because of terrorism.

"Terrorism terrifies because it's unpredictable," he said.

Baker spoke about Russia's unstable economic state and its danger to the United States and to the economic stability of the world.

"Today, Russia is arguably more dangerous to the security of the United States than at any time in our mutual history," he said.

Baker said it is important for the United States to help bring stability to Russia in the coming years, and that the first step in bringing order out of the chaos in Russia is to get rid of the corruption.

"Instability, unpredictability is the key ingredient of danger," Baker said.

Faculty Senate President Talat Rahman said she agrees the challenges with Russia's instability only have begun.

She said scarcity and an uneven distribution of wealth are part of Russia's instabilities.

She said the United States needs to convince Russia that a more organized economy is in its best interests. She suggested involving the Russians in more dialogue and treating them as equals to help them come up with solutions to their problems.

"It's in our interest to have a stable Russia for economic stability here," Rahman said.

She said a solution is important because crimes in Russia have increased due to the lack of laws against violence and corruption, and the threat of danger to the United States could increase without a change.

Baker discussed some reasons for Russia's instability. Russian soldiers and nuclear weapons scientists are not paid; food is not shipped to the remote, cold regions of the country; nuclear weapons are guarded improperly and no one knows who has control over nuclear codes, he said.

Baker attributed the downfall of Russia's economic system to its domestic and foreign debt with the lack of strong leadership.

"Russia is dangerous, not because of ideology, but because of lack of leadership," he said. "Boris Yeltsin could barely walk to and from his car at King Hussein's funeral."

Student Body President Tracey Mann said he agreed Russia doesn't have the strong leaders that the United States has, which is a big reason for its instability.

Baker said the United States should be concerned about Russia's stability because of the risks to U.S. security.

"A headless Russia, still the largest country on Earth with almost as many nuclear weapons as the United States, that is isolated and frightened, is not the Russia we want to have for our neighbor," he said.

Baker said he sees two pessimistic scenarios for the future of Russia. The first is that Russia continues to drift with no leadership and no real hope for any access to economic support. Second, he said, in an effort to reunite the fractured nation, a militarized, embarrassed and poor nationalistic Russia might be created by an authoritarian leader.

He said these scenarios are dangerous to the United States and cannot be easily controlled, "especially when we do not even know with whom to talk or who, if anyone, is ultimately in control."

proposal developed by Sens. Tim Emert, R-Independence, and Christine Downey, D-Inman, and introduced by the Senate Federal and State Affairs Committee.

"With certain changes, I would be pleased to support Senate Bill 345, and the coordinating structure it embodies," Farley said.

He also said, "I am concerned that (the plan) imposes another layer of governance on an institution which already has a governing board. In essence, it creates two boards with governance responsibility over Washburn University."

The Emert-Downey plan would abolish the present Board of Regents and create a new board with the same number of members — nine — who would be appointed in the same way members are now. The board would be divided into three sub-boards.

One of the sub-boards would run the universities, another would run the community colleges, vocational schools and technical colleges, and the third would coordinate activities of all sectors of higher education and resolve conflicts over course offerings and turf battles.

Chairwoman Barbara Lawrence, R-Wichita, said restructuring higher education in Kansas "is an idea whose time has come."

"I want the committee to look at this plan, take testimony and make it better," she said. "It is not a perfect bill. There is no way we can fashion a perfect bill. But I would like for us to look at it in a positive way."

tlement that is costing the industry $246 billion over 25 years.

In addition, the government is considering a similar suit to recover the costs of treating sick smokers. A California jury recently ordered Philip Morris to pay a smoker a record-breaking $51 million. A class-action smokers' suit is on trial in Florida, and several union health funds are suing the industry.

by anti-tobacco forces of trying to hide assets. Such accusations could have tied up such a breakup in court.

John Maxwell, an analyst at Davenport & Co., said RJR got a fantastic price for the international business and will use the proceeds to help reduce its $9.1 billion debt.

Even with lower debt, however, the R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co. faces challenges. Analysts said they expect the steady decline in smoking will accelerate because of big price increases that are being used to pay for a lawsuit set-

Wildcat baseball hopes to avoid letdown against Doane Tigers

■ K-State returns home after 3-game road trip, looks to improve 8-9 mark

By MIKE VIETTI
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State returns to Manhattan today for the first time in more than two weeks to take on the Doane Tigers at 4 p.m. at the Eisenhower Baseball Complex, in hopes of improving its 8-9 record.

The Cats are coming off a three-game stretch played at the Jacksonville Greyhound Racing Club Classic in which the team won two of three games, the last of which was a 9-8 loss to Austin Peay in 14 innings.

"We would have liked to have won all three games," head coach Mike Clark said. "But any time you go on the road and you win two of three you have to accept that."

Avoiding a letdown will be the key for the Wildcats as they face a Doane team that has lost six of seven games on the season.

"We try to take every team seriously," junior second baseman Chad Tabor said. "The loss to Austin Peay was a good realization that it takes 100-percent concentration in every game."

Senior outfielder Quinn Cravens echoed those sentiments.

"We're really concentrating on Doane. We can't take them for granted," he said. "If you take those teams for granted, they'll come up and bite you."

In a similar fashion to the Cats' contest earlier in the year against York, K-State will play as many people as possible, as well as give some starters the day off.

"The game will allow us to rest some players," assistant coach Mike Hensley said. "It also allows us to get some guys playing time who haven't had that opportunity the last three games."

Freshman Blake Johnson will make his first start of the season for the Cats, although at least four players will pitch in the game, Hensley said.

The contest will be a reunion of sorts between current Wildcat Jimmy Moore and his former team, the Doane Tigers.

Moore, a junior outfielder, played his first two years of collegiate baseball at Doane, earning all-conference honors last year.

Doane head coach Jack Hudkins encouraged Moore to transfer to a larger school in hopes of furthering his career.

"He was so good for us the last two years, I knew he had a chance to play, so I was all for it," Hudkins said.

As far as the game itself goes, Hudkins knows his team is outmatched, but enjoys playing K-State nonetheless.

"The kids really enjoy coming down here to play," Hudkins said. "They'll compete hard, and they always like telling other teams in our conference that they played a big school like K-State."

K-State leads the all-time series with Doane 3-0, including a 13-3 victory last season.

Men begin NIT play tonight against TCU

By FRANK FLATON
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

After making a strong showing at the Big 12 Conference Tournament, the K-State men's basketball team will go back to the grind of postseason play to take on Western Athletic Conference foe Texas Christian at 8 tonight at Bramlage Coliseum in the first round of the National Invitation Tournament.

The Wildcats will go into the matchup with a 20-12 record and coming off a heartbreaking 69-68 loss to Kansas in the third round of the Big 12 Tournament.

K-State gave hope for an NCAA tournament bid after knocking off No. 22 Missouri, 84-74, in the second round and shooting an impressive 46.1 percent from the field in the tournament but losing to the Jayhawks.

Chris Griffin said the Wildcats are disappointed about the Big 12 Tournament, but the team played consistently better in the postseason tournament.

"Things weren't going our way against KU," Griffin said. "But I thought we shared the ball and moved the ball around. We shot well, we rebounded well and just played very good defensively."

The Wildcats posted six players in double figures against Missouri as senior guard Ayome May and senior forward Manny Dies ignited the Wildcat attack.

Dies averaged 15.3 points per game and 6.7 rebounds, while May shot a blazing 60 percent en route to averaging 13.3 points a game in the tournament.

K-State stays alive in postseason play and will get the chance to extend its 15-2 home-court record against the Horned Frogs.

"Obviously, given a choice, you'd rather play at home," head coach Tom

GAME NOTES
K-State leads the all-time series with the Horned Frogs 3-1, including a 2-0 advantage in Manhattan. TCU won the only postseason meeting between the two teams, 77-72, in the 1998 NCAA Midwest Regional Semifinals in Wichita. TCU's head coach is former Oklahoma coach Billy Tubbs. The Horned Frogs ranked 2nd in the nation in scoring offense at 87.4 points per game. Griffin and May were honorable-mention All-Big 12 selections. The winner will face the winner of the UNLV/Nebraska game at a date and time to be determined.

Asbury said. "It will be nice to beat at home. Hopefully, we can move on and play a few more games at home."

The Horned Frogs are 19-10 on the season including a 7-7 record in the WAC conference, which features NCAA tournament hopefuls Utah and New Mexico.

TCU brings a high-powered offense that includes senior forward Lee Nailon, who averages 22.8 points and 8.9 rebounds a game, and junior college transfer Marquise Gainous, who posts 18.4 points and 8.8 rebounds a

The K-State Wildcats will meet yet another powerful post player when they take on the Texas Christian Horned Frogs tonight at Bramlage Coliseum in first-round action of the National Invitation Tournament.

Senior Lee Nailon, a 6-foot 9-inch forward/center, has led the Horned Frogs in both scoring and rebounding. He stands eighth in the nation in scoring with an average of 22.8 points per game, and he also averages 9.3 rebounds per contest for 27th in the country.

K-State assistant coach Mark Fox said Nailon will be the toughest of the post players they've seen this season. The Wildcats already have faced Oklahoma's Eduardo Najera, Nebraska's Venson Hamilton and Kansas' Eric Chenoweth, who was named to the Honorable Mention All-American squad.

"He is the best of the bunch we've seen this season," Fox said. "He's going to be a first-round draft pick probably. He's real big and strong and very versatile. He can score facing the basket, and he can score with his back to the basket."

Fox said in order to stop Nailon it will take a complete team defensive effort.

"We've had guys all year that accept the challenge to guard the big guys," Fox said. "If we're going to have success against Nailon, there has to be a number of guys step up again. We'll have to do whatever it takes to keep the ball out of his hands as much as possible."

"We have to have some great team defense this time. It's not going to be just one guy that gets to guard Nailon. We're going to use Tony Kitt, Shawn Rhodes, Manny Dies, Travis Reynolds and Joe Leonard on him. It'll be a big group of guys."

One of the problems that might occur if the Cats double or triple team Nailon is the other 6-foot 9-inch forward/center Marquise Gainous, who averages 18.4 points per game, will have more opportunities to score.

Fox said they may double and triple team Nailon but said he realizes Gainous is dangerous in his own right.

"Nailon may see some double teams as well as some triple teams," Fox said. "We have to be careful because if we start doubling Nailon, Gainous can get us. It'll be a great challenge for us."

Team's effort, fans' support decide where Cats play next

By NICK BRATKOVIC
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State women's basketball team will be fighting two battles while playing one game Thursday.

On the court, the team takes on Creighton, and K-State assistant coach Sue Serafini said the team will come ready to play.

"We will come ready to fight and hopefully continue to host as long as we can put people in the seats," Serafini said.

Serafini is referring to the Cats' other battle: off the court, K-State fans will be taking on the fans of Arkansas State in an attendance battle.

Arkansas State plays in the other bracket and Serafini said the WNIT is set up in such a way that the team in the bracket with higher attendance for the game will continue playing at home.

"If the fans can give this team a lot of support, then we have the opportunity to host a second-round game against the winner of Arkansas State and New Hampshire," Serafini said.

This season K-State has set record numbers in school attendance, averaging 3,216 fans per game. The school's previous average was 2,863 fans, and this week the team is ranked 29th nationally in attendance.

K-State head coach Deb Patterson said attendance has been critical in the team's 9-4 home record.

"The crowd for us is critical against a great opponent, and it will be nice to have a home-court advantage," Patterson said. "If we hope to advance and continue hosting in the Women's NIT, then we need bring in between four and five thousand fans."

The WNIT, which has 32 teams, is set up so that all of the games are played at a site to be announced. Serafini said the Cats would like to continue playing the games at home and need the fans' continued support.

"Attendance at home played a huge role for us this season," Serafini said. "The 8,000 fans we had for the KU game was the talk of the Big 12 tournament. People were congratulating us on the accomplishment."

K-State forward Brandy Harris said the attendance against Kansas was phenomenal, and it made a difference in the outcome of the game.

"It makes a ton of difference when you have 8,000 fans at the game," Harris said. "When we were down, the crowd got on their feet cheering, and it was awesome to have that many people there."

Serafini said the game against Creighton is an opportunity for the Cats and their fans to show the women's basketball world that big things are happening at K-State.

"We want to show people that this is a great place, and the university gives us a lot of support," Serafini said. "We want to let people know that great things are happening here at Kansas State."

Patterson said crowd support for the game against Creighton will be important, and a big turnout would be nice.

"This team has worked hard to bring home court in this tournament game, and hopefully it will be supported," Patterson said.

Moundridge's Koehn a sure shot to catch Patterson's eye

VIEWPOINT

Jon WHITE

Thursday is a big day for the K-State women's basketball program. Yes, the first-round WNIT matchup against Creighton at 8 p.m. in Bramlage Coliseum is important to the program, but that's not what I'm alluding to.

The first round of the 2A State Tournament game between Moundridge High School and Garden Plain High School at 2:30 p.m. in Bramlage is also important to the K-State program. The game could preview what K-State coach Deb Patterson probably hopes will be part of Wildcat women's basketball someday — Moundridge junior Laurie Koehn.

Patterson is lucky; it's not often that a top prospect plays a real game on your home floor before she is actually a part of the program.

K-State is just one of the many schools recruiting Koehn, who plays both the point- and shooting-guard positions, and I'm guessing the university will have plenty of representatives on hand to watch her play this weekend.

Patterson was spotted watching Moundridge play Feb. 2, and the team lost the game, 47-50, to Pretty Prairie, a 1A powerhouse, on a last-second three-point shot. The loss came after the team's only other loss this season — a setback to McPherson High School, the No. 1 team in 5A, which ended Moundridge's 49-game winning streak.

The two losses probably haven't hurt Patterson's opinion of Koehn.

Consider what Koehn has accomplished during her high school career. Koehn averaged a little more than 30 points per game this season. Her shooting percentage could quite possibly be the most impressive part of her offensive game. Through the first round of sub-state, she made 67 percent of her shots from the field, 40 percent from three-point range and 94 percent from the free-throw line.

Koehn's season-high scoring total this season is 45, which she had in the Feb. 19 victory over Pretty Prairie.

In last season's state tournament, she led Moundridge to the title by setting the 2A state record for most points in a state tournament with 90. She poured in 40 in the state championship, also a record.

Moundridge Coach Sue Hetzke said Koehn produces many of her scoring opportunities, which occur frequently, with her defense and quickness.

Patterson is lucky; it's not often that a top prospect plays a real game on your home floor before she is actually part of a program.

"She's an all-around player," Hetzke said. "A lot of her points come from her defensive effort. She gets a lot of steals at the top, and once she gets in front with the ball, no one can catch her."

Moundridge's opponents have implemented some gimmick defenses in trying to slow down Koehn this season.

"Most of the teams we've played have gone a box and one on her," Hetzke said. Hetzke said she isn't convinced of the success of the trick defenses.

"If you want to say they're being successful or not, that would be debatable," Hetzke said. "As long as we win the game, they don't work, as far as I'm concerned."

Koehn's success hasn't come without a price. Hetzke said Koehn shoots 500-600 baskets at home every day after practice. She spends her summers playing AAU basketball, and she works out on the court at least an hour everyday outside of the high school season.

Koehn's career record in high school is 70-4, and her class is shooting for its third-straight state championship this weekend. Last season's Moundridge team went 26-0, a considerable feat knowing that it plays in the strongest small-school league in the state, the Heart of America league. The league produces the 1A and 2A state champions almost every year.

Anyone who appreciates good basketball should watch Moundridge play in Bramlage on Thursday. If the team wins, it would play Friday at 6:30 p.m. in the semi-final, and the championship is 4 p.m. Saturday.

I don't want to knock any of Moundridge's opponents because it's not a forgone conclusion the team will be playing for the championship. However, Koehn's Wildcats have never lost a state-tournament game.

You can bet Patterson is well aware of that stat.

game. "TCU is an excellent team. They present a challenge," Asbury said. "Got to be prepared to handle the transition on defense. We don't have time to look past TCU. We only have 2 to 2 1/2 days to prepare. We have to handle the pressure."

On the other side of the ball, Asbury said the team must watch out for the Horned Frogs' aggressive style of defense, which Asbury said reminds him of Kansas' defensive strategies.

"I'd say Kansas is aggressive like that," he said. "TCU has a strong front line. I don't know if anybody else in our league is more comparable."

Although, Asbury and his teams haven't played TCU or its head coach Billy Tubbs, faithful Wildcat fans are not strangers to the fiery Tubbs.

At Oklahoma, Tubbs was 19-10 against K-State in his 14 seasons with the Sooners. Tubbs has compiled a 99-55 record with the Horned Frogs and looks for his 100th win against the Wildcats.

Against TCU, K-State leads the all-time series 3-1 and has a 2-0 advantage in Bramlage.

Climate prepares track team for meets

By SARAH CRAIG
KANSAS STATE COLLEGE

There are few Division I sports that compete at both indoor and outdoor levels; track and field is one of them. Athletes have a number of variables that change with the change of facilities.

The most prominent issue is climate. While some would consider Kansas weather a disadvantage for athletes, Coach Cliff Rovelto said learning to deal with the elements has helped the team in the past.

"Last year it was very cold in Buffalo, New York, in the beginning of June in the NCAA meet," Rovelto said. "There were a lot of southern schools that quite frankly were moaning and groaning about how cold it was, and they didn't perform very well. We were kind of the only men's four-by-four Northern school that was in the finals, and we ended up fourth.

"We flat out weren't the best four-by-four, but we got fourth at the meet because we were better conditioned to competing in those elements. We beat folks that we hadn't beaten all year long."

While K-State might have the cold weather advantage, it has little preparation for heat. The team will be competing during spring break against Southern schools to adjust. Rovelto said the athletes this year will be a little better prepared than last year, when they did not get to practice outdoor at all before the first meet.

"You have to be careful, and be smart, and stay out of the sun," Rovelto said. "That's one of the reasons why over spring break we've scheduled two meets in the South, where we hope there's nice weather, so we'll go down there and spend time in that part of the country — just to be there and get used to it a little bit I think does help."

Some athletes said the extra field events in the outdoor season make practices and meets more challenging than indoor.

"Outdoor — it's a lot more difficult because there's more events, three or four, you have to account that you're going to have more events during a track meet," senior thrower Renetta Seiler said. "We're going to have to double up and throw two events a day at practice. It's a lot more work."

Others said they hope to improve on the events they felt were lacking indoors.

"Overall, I think my indoor season was pretty good," junior jumper Erin Anderson said. "Vault went pretty well for me, but I need to work on my high jump. I know what I need to do, so hopefully working with coach will get my jumps higher."

Another challenge for some is the short amount of practice time between the end of the indoor and the start of outdoor seasons. Those athletes who competed in the NCAA meet have until Thursday or Friday, depending on event, to prepare for outdoor competition.

"It's kind of hard because I haven't even picked up a discus, so it's going to be kind of difficult," Seiler said. "We have less than a week of practice before the first meet. We just have to try to get our timing down this week — that's about all we can do. We have to try to quickly adjust to everything."

Airstrikes on Iraq continue despite ally's criticism

By JOHN DIAMOND
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

AL JABER AIR BASE, Kuwait — A prominent Persian Gulf ally criticized the Clinton administration Tuesday for almost daily airstrikes against Iraqi anti-aircraft targets.

Despite the criticism, U.S. F-16s loaded with bombs and missiles continued to roar aloft from this desert base on the doorstep of southern Iraq. U.S. pilots said they weren't looking for trouble but were ready to strike if fired upon. And the Iraqis were still firing.

The foreign minister of Qatar, a moderate Arab ally in the Gulf region, told Defense Secretary William Cohen that the standoff with Iraq should end peacefully and the daily strikes by U.S. warplanes responding to Iraqi challenges should cease.

"We do not wish to see Iraq being bombed daily," Sheik Hamad bin Jassim Al-Thani, Qatar's foreign minister, told reporters in a news conference with Cohen at his side. "We understand the position of the United States," Sheik Hamad said, but he added: "I cannot say we support the daily (attacks) in the no-fly zone."

The statements marked the first open opposition from any U.S. partner in the Persian Gulf during Cohen's week-long swing through the region. Until Tuesday, Cohen and senior Pentagon officials said they encountered no explicit opposition to the U.S. actions in meetings with leaders in Bahrain, Saudi Arabia, Oman and the United Arab Emirates.

During the news conference in Doha, Qatar's capital, Cohen defended the U.S.

strikes as basic self-defense against Iraqi leader Saddam Hussein's stepped-up effort to defy international sanctions and shoot down a U.S. warplane.

"The way for the attacks to stop is for Saddam to simply stop trying to violate the no-fly zones and stop trying to kill our pilots," Cohen said.

After the news conference, Cohen flew to this base in western Kuwait, where two dozen Air Force F-16s and 12 A-10 ground-attack planes flown by Pennsylvania and Maryland Air National Guard crews operate against Iraq.

"I want to tell you how important the mission you're doing is," Cohen told about 200 pilots and ground crewmen.

As Cohen arrived, attacks and counterattacks continued in the northern Iraqi deny-flight zone. Army Col. Richard Bridges said U.S. F-15 fighters launched 500-pound bombs at three anti-aircraft sites that fired on patrolling planes. U.S. planes based in Kuwait and Saudi Arabia, as well as carrier-based aircraft in the Persian Gulf, cover the larger southern deny-flight zone.

In Washington, D.C., a Senate critic of the Clinton administration's Iraq policy suggested the United States is squandering an opportunity to move more forcefully to oust Saddam. "We've really got a moment now where he is weaker, where there is internal dissent building up," said Sen. Sam Brownback, R-Kan.

Brownback, chairman of a Senate Foreign Relations subcommittee, complained the administration has spent "not one cent" of some $97 million Congress earmarked last year to provide military assistance to opposition groups.

Beth Jones, an assistant secretary of state for Near East affairs, told Brownback's committee none of the designated groups are yet ready to begin using the U.S. aid. "It is very important that this be an Iraqi effort that we support. It is not appropriate for us to dictate what the regime change should be," she said.

Arab critics suggest the United States is looking for a fight, hoping to provoke Iraq into firing to clear the way for punishing retaliatory strikes.

Qatar's semi-independent Gulf Times said in an editorial last weekend: "Even Iraqis who oppose their government regard the (U.S.) airstrikes as an act of aggression."

In an interview, Air Force Lt. Col. Bob Harvey, pilot of an F-16 CJ equipped with radar-seeking Harm missiles, challenged that view.

If fired upon, Harvey said, "We either defend ourselves immediately or we plan a retaliatory strike."

About Iraq's air defense system, he said, "We try to stay away from it mostly. We're not looking to get shot at. That's not fun."

U.S. pilots never fly inside a known Iraqi "engagement zone," Harvey said, referring to the circular areas covered by Iraqi air defense radars and surface-to-air missiles.

They also must resist what the pilots call the "SAM-bush," a tactic in which an Iraqi fighter will dart into the restricted flying zone in hopes of drawing a U.S. warplane into a chase that will pull the American plane into range of a surface-to-air missile battery.

Putting on the Armor

Organization recreates medieval history with period costumes, battles

By CORBIN H. CRABLE
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

For more than 20 years, the Society for Creative Anachronism has offered an unconventional way to study history.

The organization, formed in 1978, is an international group devoted to studying the Middle Ages by recreating personalities, cultures and backgrounds from the period.

Natalie Smith, a staff assistant in Holton Hall's Educational and Personal Development department, has been the adviser of K-State's chapter of SCA, called the Shire of the Spinning Winds, for the past three years. Smith said the members of each group create their own personality, give that person a history and background, and ensure the events in their lives coincide with events and culture of the Middle Ages. The members of the group, she said, also don their period costumes and participate in battles using real weapons of the era.

Smith said she greatly enjoys being able to visit the other chapters around the region, which are called "shires."

"My favorite part is going to visit the other shires, and when they have weekend events, we participate in those," she said. "The events include dancing and art competitions."

Mike Prohaska, SCA member, said the group recognizes the Middle Ages as falling between A.D. 600 and A.D. 1650 and said the purpose of the organization is to learn.

"We're just a bunch of history buffs that like to camp out," he said. "We like to recreate the Middle Ages and learn as much about it as possible."

Prohaska, whose wife Mary is the president of K-State's SCA chapter, said the group focuses more on creating their personalities for education than as a form of entertainment.

"Everyone involved in the group is very deeply into history," he said. "We like the various cultures represented in the Middle Ages. In fact, you can find just about any type of nationality represented in the group."

Smith said she believes the group encourages both education and entertainment.

"The goal is to gain historical knowledge, but we have lots of fun doing it," she said.

Prohaska and Smith said, however, there is a predominant stereotype about SCA and its members.

MORE INFO? SCA meets Sunday afternoon at the Ogden Community Center. It will meet every week at Manhattan City Park starting May 1. For more information about SCA, contact Natalie Smith, adviser, at 532-6441.

doing this is to learn about medieval history," Smith said.

Battles in period armor and weapons are a significant aspects of the group, Prohaska said. At most of its meetings, battles ensue, and Prohaska said as authentic as they seem, the only thing missing from these fights is the presence of injuries.

"During our combat, we attempt not to hurt each other," he said. "Our fighting systems are based on honorable combat."

With the armor, period costumes and weapons, one might think involvement in SCA would be a bit costly, but Smith said in many cases, the cost depends on the how much members are willing to spend.

"It depends on the individual and how much money they are able or willing to put into it," she said. "Some people can't afford very much, so they make a simple tunic or learn embroidery. It doesn't have to be expensive at all."

Prohaska said he thought SCA is an effective learning tool for gathering knowledge about the culture of the Middle Ages.

"If you can imagine anything about the Middle Ages, we can come up with an expert to tell you about it," he said.

UPC to present Anime films

By CORBIN H. CRABLE
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

ON THE WEB

For more information visit the KSU Anime and Manga Society's World Wide Web Page at www.personal.ksu.edu/~anime

Student members of the KSU Anime and Manga society said watching Anime is a great way to learn about the culture of Japan, and they want to share that opportunity with the campus.

As part of Asian-American Awareness Month, the Union Program Council and the Anime and Manga Society are showing a Japanese animation film festival.

Chris Heeley, junior in interior architecture and UPC Kaleidoscope Films committee chairman, said he credits the Anime and Manga Society with putting together the festival of Japanese animated films, also called "Anime."

"For the most part, the Kaleidoscope committee helped with publicizing the event," Heeley said, "but Manga's done almost all of the work for the program."

Films are shown in the early afternoon every day through Monday (except for Thursday and Friday), and there also is a Saturday evening show. Admission to all films is free. Today's presentation will take place in the K-State Student Union Forum Hall, and the other shows will be in the Union Little Theater.

Bridgid Reeves, sophomore in physics, said the purpose of the Anime and Manga Society is not only to showcase quality Anime but also to raise awareness about the Asian culture.

"Part of our goal is to get more people involved in cultural awareness because Japan has a fascinating history," Reeves said. "Anime helps bring that across in many different ways."

Heeley said he thought Anime was an effective way to spark interest about other cultures.

"I think it introduces people to new ideas and presents more diverse entertainment," he said. "Hopefully, after viewing these films, someone will take the next step and try to learn about another culture."

While Anime is becoming increasingly popular in the United States, Reeves said Anime deals with controversial issues, which may be offensive to some viewers.

"The Japanese don't have as many taboos against nudity and sexual content. A lot of their Anime reflects that," Reeves said. "For instance, they'll address the subject of homosexuality, and think nothing of it. It's normal to them."

Heeley said, however, he thought the controversy makes the films more interesting.

"I think Anime is an art form, and that type of in-your-face racism is in almost all Japanese animation," he said. "I would think those who are interested in these films know what they're getting into. For those who don't, I would encourage them to keep an open mind."

Reeves said the meetings of the Anime and Manga Society usually are quite entertaining.

"At our meetings, we encourage people to show up and watch our movies and hang out with people who have the same interests," she said.

'Office Space' offers fun cubicle comedy

By DIANA LEE
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Should Mike Judge's new comedy "Office Space" prove to be any indication, those of us looking forward to the corporate world after graduation are in for some misery.

Peter Gibbons (Ron Livingston) sits in a cubicle at Initech Corp., day after monotonous day, battling a boss who is a complete moron. The only thing he has to look forward to is seeing his dream girl, a waitress named Joanne (Jennifer Aniston) when he and his friends slip out for much-needed coffee breaks.

After some random cutbacks at Initech, Peter and his equally traumatized cohorts Michael Bolton (David Herman) and Samir (Ajay Naidu), rise up against the evil corporation and implement a nearly flawless plan for retaliation.

Though the plot is no less predictable than the next romantic comedy, Judge's dialogue makes this film well worth seeing.

Michael, a computer nerd who releases steam by bumping gangsta rap, faces some fairly idiotic comments from people who can't tell by his haircut that he is not "the Michael Bolton."

Peter's neighbor, Lawrence (Diedrich Bader), is the stereotypical beer-drinking construction worker. This guy is constantly thinking about women, and his excitement at seeing a breast self-examination public-service announcement on television will remind anyone of someone he or she knows.

Although this is not the film for anyone looking for intelligent comedy, it's a very good time. It's one of the first films in quite some time to keep the viewers rolling up to the end of the movie and every time they think about it for a week afterward.

TRIO assists with success in college

■ From start to finish, TRIO helps low-income students prepare for their futures.

By KELLY EVENSON
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Educational Opportunity Act of 1964 was the beginning of Upward Bound, an educational service available to first-generation and low-income students to enable them to pursue post-secondary education. This also led to the formation of the TRIO program.

The TRIO program, which includes Upward Bound, the McNair Scholars Program and Educational Support Services on the K-State campus, was established to help low-income high school students become college-bound and enter the work force.

Elverta Vassol, academic service coordinator, said TRIO provides such services as tutoring and mentoring to students who otherwise might not have the opportunity.

"This helps students develop skills and provide support that they probably wouldn't receive without the programs," Vassol said.

However, not all students are qualified to be in the TRIO program.

Two-thirds of the students enrolled in TRIO must come from families with incomes less than $24,000, with neither parent having graduated from college.

Laura Ciccantell, student service coordinator, said the benefit of the TRIO program is to provide educational support to students who need it.

"Our goal is to retain students at K-State," Ciccantell said. "K-State graduation rates are low, so we are all about helping raise those and helping students to graduate."

The Upward Bound program begins the process of helping students get on the right foot toward a college education. Cassandra Nicholson, student service coordinator for Upward Bound, said the goal of the program is to create a holistic student and to instill skills needed at the collegiate level.

There are 72 students from Manhattan, Junction City, Wamego and Riley County high schools enrolled in the program.

"We focus on assisting students with relationships with their teachers, leadership development, organization, community service and exposing them to the college environment," Nicholson said.

Assistance with preparing for the ACT examination, career development, helping students decide what institution best suits them and what profession they would like to go into, and scholarship searches are some of the services Upward Bound provides.

Nicholson said another program offered is a summer session for high school students who have completed their senior year.

This allows students to come to the K-State campus for six weeks during the summer, live in the residence halls, attend classes and receive college credit that will transfer to any college they choose to attend.

"This gives students a chance to go into the college setting, experience college life, live with a roommate and decide if college is really for them," Nicholson said. "They are experiencing college up-front."

Nicholson said a large benefit to Upward Bound is that it's free to all students enrolled.

She said this allows students to get ACT preparation and college information that normally might be costly to them.

"We help students from low-income backgrounds get the necessary support and skills and see that it is possible to go to college," Nicholson said.

Educational Support Services is a TRIO program that assists students while they are in college.

Ciccantell said the program also serves students with physical and mental disabilities.

"We are a guide for students who may not know where to go for help," Ciccantell said. "We also try to be a referral resource for students."

Ciccantell and two assistants meet with each of the 300 students enrolled in ESS twice each semester to see how the individuals are doing in classes and to provide support service when needed.

"Our funding only allows us to enroll a maximum of 300 students, and that doesn't nearly serve everyone on campus," Ciccantell said.

"We provide tutoring and counseling services so that students will have somewhere to go and know their questions will be answered."

The McNair Scholars Program is a TRIO service designed to prepare undergraduate students for graduate school. Lora Boyer, assistant director of McNair, said it helps students apply to graduate school and be successful.

McNair was established in 1995 at K-State, and there are 99 programs nationally.

Twenty students can be enrolled at a time, but because the program is a two-year process, only 10 students are accepted each fall.

"We give them the guidance when preparing for the graduate school process," Boyer said. "Many students involved in the program become better graduate students because of it."

Boyer said McNair is not a scholarship, but a two-year program. Throughout the first year, students learn about preparing to do research. During the summer, students complete the research, and in the second year they present the projects and start applying to graduate schools.

"We try to help them find individual graduate programs that are compatible with them and their research interests," Boyer said. "We help them prepare for examinations and assist them in going to campuses to evaluate their programs."

During the summer research project, students are paid as though it were an internship.

"Two-thirds of our students come from a limited income," Boyer said. "By providing the internship, students can afford to focus on their academics and not have to take the summer off to work."

Ciara Ames, age 6, glues down a border with the help of Jennifer Laub, junior in elementary education, Tuesday afternoon at Jefferson Elementary School on Fort Riley. About 40 K-State students helped about 230 kindergarten-to-fifth graders make dream quilts. Ames is a student in Paula Wewer's kindergarten class.

Damaris Hudson, 5, and Rosa Falke, senior in elementary education, spread glue on the border of Hudson's picture. Each student drew a picture, then was helped by K-State students in Lynda Andrus' Art For Elementary Schools class to apply a cloth patch-work border. After each class finished its squares, they were sewn together into a quilt.

QUILTING dreams

Art students help children grow creatively

With the help of K-State students, more than two hundred elementary children from Fort Riley made dream quilts Tuesday.

Lynda Andrus, assistant professor of art, incorporated the project into her class Art for Elementary Schools. Fifty of her students went to Jefferson Elementary School on Fort Riley from 9 a.m. to 2 p.m. to help with the project and to gain practical classroom experience.

"This is a chance to get to come and see if what you learn in the classroom works," Andrus said. "You learn a lot by actually coming in and working with the kids."

Andrus said the idea for the quilts came from the book "Tar Beach," by Faith Ringold.

"The story is about a little girl who dreamed of flying," Andrus said. "The children prepared for the project by reading the book in class and drawing pictures of their own dreams before coming today."

Tuesday, the children came to the school gymnasium with the drawings of their dreams in hand.

To make the quilts, the children turned their drawing into a quilt square using glue and squares of fabric.

Before finishing their squares, the children wrote their dream on the picture they had drawn.

School mothers came later in the morning to sew the pieces into larger quilts for each class. When the quilts are finished, they will be hung in the halls of the school, Andrus said.

Funding for the project was provided by a grant written by K-State student Jeri Bisbee, Andrus said.

"Jeri was in this class last semester and felt the projects were really important," Andrus said. "She's a full-time mom as well as a student, so she really sacrificed to make sure this project could happen."

Diane Long, junior in elementary education, said the quilts are a good way to incorporate many types of art into one project.

"The quilts are what we call discipline-based art," Long said. "The kids are learning through drawing, cutting, gluing and writing. This kind of project tells a lot about your students, because they are sharing their dreams and showing many kinds of work skills."

Beth Oltjen, junior in elementary education, said the class has worked with other schools earlier in the semester.

"Last week, we did the same project at Junction City and Washington Elementary, but we only worked with the kindergartners," Oltjen said. "This time the whole school participated. I don't think they have an art teacher at Jefferson either, so it was good to give the kids a chance to work on art projects."

Oltjen said time with students from different grades was beneficial.

"It gave us exposure to all ages so we could see how each group reacts to the same thing."

Republicans call for explanation of nuclear security leak

■ Government scientist kept his job for 3 years while under investigation.

By H. JOSEF HEBERT
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — In a growing national security flap, Republican lawmakers demanded that the Clinton administration explain Tuesday why a nuclear weapons lab scientist kept his job for nearly three years while under investigation for espionage.

The Senate Intelligence Committee will have a closed-door hearing next week to ask top administration officials, including Energy Secretary Bill Richardson and FBI Director Louis Freeh, about the espionage investigation involving the scientist at the Los Alamos National Laboratory.

A native of Taiwan, Wen Ho Lee, who is in his 50s, had worked at the prestigious weapons research laboratory in New Mexico for a dozen years or more before being dismissed on Monday at Richardson's direction.

While Lee has not been charged with any crime, nor arrested, he has been the prime suspect in a three-year investigation into allegations that China obtained sensitive nuclear weapons design information from Los Alamos in the 1980s.

The case and the way the investigation was handled has fueled a long-standing controversy over Clinton administration's policies on trade and technology transfers to China and whether those policies might compromise national security.

It also has raised new questions about an administration openness policy at national labs that in the mid-1990s allowed greater access to scientists and researchers, including those from Russia and China.

Congressional investigators in 1997 said thousands of foreign visitors were given access without adequate background checks.

"We're interested in what some people believe is a lax attitude toward security at some of our national labs, including Los Alamos" and whether the administration "reacted to possible breaches in that security in a timely manner," said Sen. Richard Shelby, R-Ala., Intelligence Committee chairman.

Shelby said in a telephone interview Tuesday that "it makes no sense" for the Energy Department not to have acted sooner to remove Lee from his job if he had been targeted since 1996 in an espionage investigation.

Administration officials defended the way the Los Alamos investigation was conducted and Richardson's decision to have Lee fired after he reportedly refused to cooperate with the FBI during three days of interviews recently.

"We fired him because he had misused security," said Richardson. "He had improper contact with foreign officials, and he had violated a number of security measures."

U.S. intelligence officials became concerned in 1995 about China's apparently having obtained U.S. warhead design information, probably from Los Alamos, leading to an FBI criminal investigation in early 1996 that quickly focused on Lee.

White House spokesman Joe Lockhart said the administration launched "a vigorous assessment using the CIA and other assets in our national security operation."

"It is absolutely not true that we downplayed evidence of this," State Department spokesman James P. Rubin said, when asked about the Los Alamos investigation. "We took the issue seriously, as our actions demonstrate."

While there have been no arrests, lawmakers, mainly Republicans, expressed concern about the apparent loss to China of U.S. secrets that, according to U.S. intelligence sources, allowed China to make a significant leap in developing new warhead technology in the early 1990s.

"We found out last year when the technology was transferred through American corporations. ... Now we find this lax security," complained Senate Majority Leader Trent Lott of Mississippi.

"What I want to know is, what actions are we going to take to stop this kind of misconduct?"

Administration officials emphasized that the alleged espionage occurred in the 1980s — in a Republican administration under President Reagan — and that President Clinton in early 1998 took steps to beef up counterintelligence efforts and security at the weapons labs.

Rep. Christopher Cox, R-Calif., chairman of a select committee investigating U.S. military and commercial dealings with China, said his panel had received testimony on the Lee case, and details are included in a still-classified report.

While not commenting directly on the Lee case, he expressed concern it was part of a broader pattern in which federal weapons labs "failed to take even minimal steps necessary for counterintelligence." He said there were strong disagreements with the White House over how much of the 700-page report should be made public.

Meanwhile, Lee, about whom little is publicly known, appeared to have dropped out of public view.

The telephone at his home in Los Alamos, N.M., was disconnected. Earlier, his wife, who once had been a secretary at the Los Alamos lab, declined to comment when reached by a reporter.

65 VOTES SHY

Heinrich misses majority, faces Prieto in runoff

Jason Heinrich (left) and Gabe Eckert explain election results to the crowd at their post-election party Wednesday night at the Lambda Chi Alpha house. Heinrich and Eckert received 47 percent of the vote, putting them in a runoff with Leo Prieto and Chris Bainter.

Presidential and vice presidential candidates Jason Heinrich and Gabe Eckert were 65 votes short of an outright victory Wednesday, receiving 47.7 percent of the 2,841 total votes cast in this week's Student Governing Association elections.

"So close, so close," Heinrich said. "It's a bittersweet feeling."

They will face Leo Prieto and Chris Bainter — who received 27.7 percent of the vote — in a runoff election Monday. Five other pairs of candidates were eliminated after votes were counted Wednesday.

Heinrich and Eckert needed more than 50 percent of the vote to win the election outright.

Prieto and Bainter said they're ready to take the challenge of the runoff. Prieto said he believes their issues are important and are targeted toward students.

"The big 'S' across our chests on our shirts is for the students," Prieto said.

Prieto and Bainter must first face an Elections Committee hearing tonight for campaign violations. A mistake on their contribution report means the two could be disqualified, but Elections Chair Joe Ashley said that's unlikely.

"They've been really forthcoming with us, and the election committee by precedence will most likely not disqualify them," he said.

Ashley said an individual listed on Prieto's contribution report wasn't a student.

"We were just going to fine them

Heinrich nearly gets majority

The student body presidential ticket of Jason Heinrich and Gabe Eckert received almost 48 percent of the vote, just missing the majority required to be declared the outright winner. Instead, that ticket will face off against the ticket of Leo Prieto/Chris Bainter in a runoff Monday.

* Willis Kidd/Adam Beel (210 votes), Buzz Masters/Big McCarthy (177 votes), Rick Wooten/Aaron Shea (140 votes), Aaron Velasquez/Brad Klein (91 votes), Justin VanNest/Amanda Olson (60 votes), write-ins (21 votes) basically for it, and they've contested it," he said.

The candidates' first offense was posting signs in the residence hall zone, Ashley said.

If Prieto and Bainter are disqualified, the runoff would be between Heinrich and Eckert and Willis Kidd and Adam Beel, the ticket with the next-highest vote total.

Prieto said his and Bainter's goals for the rest of the week are to prepare for Monday, start organizing, continue to make phone calls and meet people.

"The next thing to do is to definitely unwind," he said. "It's been so hectic for Chris and I."

Heinrich supporters excited by wide lead

As Jason Heinrich walked toward the phone at the Lambda Chi Alpha house, a hush came over the crowd of more than 40 supporters as they closed their eyes and crossed their fingers.

As the bittersweet news came over the line, Heinrich smiled and addressed the anxious crowd.

"We've got good news, and we've got bad news," Heinrich said. "The good news is that we've got 47 percent. The bad news is we've got another week left."

Heinrich, senior in industrial engineering, and running mate Gabe Eckert, senior in agricultural journalism, received 1,356 votes, which is 47.7 percent of the voter total.

After sharing the big news, Heinrich and Eckert encouraged everyone to continue doing a great job and to concentrate on getting people to go to the polls and vote for them.

Supporters laughed about having to wash their campaign T-shirts as they gear up for a few more days of campaigning.

"It's awesome," Emily Emerson, senior in architectural engineering and campaign manager, said about the runoff. "We'll just work even harder. It's a great margin."

Supporters were excited about the wide margin between Heinrich and Eckert and the other runoff ticket of Leo Prieto and Chris Bainter.

"I like our chances," Heinrich said. "But it's not over yet. We've got a long way to go."

Many of Heinrich and Eckert's supporters had anticipated the runoff between their ticket and Prieto and Bainter.

"With this many tickets, the chances for a runoff are certain," Cade Keenan, senior in industrial engineering, said.

Emerson said about 80 people helped with Heinrich and Eckert's campaign, and getting extra support for the runoff wouldn't be difficult.

"It'd be nice to not have a runoff," Sara Reser, senior in marketing, said. "But we're in it for the long haul. I know Jason and Gabe have worked really hard."

Josh Rengstorf, campaign treasurer and senior in feed science and management and agricultural economics, said Heinrich and Eckert have a great group of campaign members who will continue to focus on getting people out to vote. He said Heinrich and Eckert's diverse experiences and practical issues will stand out.

Reser said they will try to reach the voters who initially voted for other candidates. She said the voters who already supported Heinrich and Eckert will come back to vote Monday.

"If they voted for the right reasons,

Presidential candidate Leo Prieto gives a thumbs up to his supporters Wednesday night at Lucky BrewGrille. Prieto and running mate Chris Bainter received 786 votes, which was 27.7 percent of the 2,841 total votes.

Prieto says he can make up ground

By ANGELA KISTNER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

It's close to 10 p.m. and Leo Prieto is walking around Lucky BrewGrille trying to hide his nerves.

"Yeah, slightly," was the response of student body presidential candidate Prieto when asked if he was nervous.

Chris Bainter, Prieto's running mate, hasn't arrived at the election party due to duties at the K-State men's basketball game.

But he arrives just in time to hear it's not over. He and Prieto placed second in the general elections with 27.7 percent of the vote and will now prepare for the runoff election Monday against Jason Heinrich and Gabe Eckert, who had 47.7 percent of the vote.

"This is only the beginning, all right. This is only the beginning," Prieto said to the crowd of supporters chanting his name.

"We got a lot of supporters behind us. We just have to come together and tear it up," he said. "We're going to do this."

Bainter, junior in computer engineering, said he and Prieto, junior in pre-law and Spanish, wouldn't be where they're at if people didn't believe in them.

"We just represent the students' voice and students' issues. And all the people who voted for us believed in our issues," he said. "We just hope that everyone who truly believes in us and believes that our issues are good get out and vote. Unless they show up, our issues won't happen."

Prieto said their issues — a coalition initiative, mandatory rental inspections and city-wide transportation system — are just the bare necessities.

"We're talking about public housing here," he said. "How basic is that? We're talking about campus parking."

Prieto said he thought he can make up for the gap in votes between himself and Heinrich.

"A large part of that is going to come from supporters of other candidates," he said.

A lot of the presidential candidates had the same philosophy as us, Prieto

Jason Heinrich (left) expresses his disappointment about not getting more than 50 percent of the votes for student body president when results were announced Wednesday night at the Lambda Chi Alpha house. "So close, so close," Heinrich said after learning he and running mate Gabe Eckert earned 47 percent of the vote and would be in a runoff with Leo Prieto and Chris Bainter.

K-State recruit misses final Jeopardy question, loses

Seventeen-year-old Jeff Cary, a senior at Leavenworth High School and once a prospective K-State student, was a contestant on "Jeopardy" as part of its annual Teen Tournament that aired Feb. 22 through March 5.

"It was really cool but really weird," Cary said. "I didn't realize I was on the show until I left."

After making it to the semi-finals, Cary got knocked out with a question about Ben and Jerry's ice cream. He won $5,000 and a computer.

Teens who passed the test and performed well in the mock game were considered for the show. From the 20,000 teens nationwide that tried out, Cary was one of the 15 chosen to compete for the $25,000 jackpot. Two were from Kansas.

"We're very excited and very proud that he's a part of Leavenworth High School," Jim Van Maanen, principal at Leavenworth High School, said.

Although he thought about attending K-State, Cary has decided to spend his college years at the University of Kansas, with plans to major in political science.

"KU seemed to be more interested in me than K-State, and I'm on a first name basis with people there," Cary said.

Cary is a National Merit Finalist and has been awarded several academic scholarships. The money situation seemed to be the determining factor for Cary.

"Jeff is an incredibly bright and articulate person," Van Maanen said. "KU offered him the farm."

K.C. teen-ager says she made up claim of abduction

KANSAS CITY, Kan. — A 15-year-old girl who told police she was abducted from her school bus stop now says she skipped school and fabricated the story.

She told her false story to police Friday, two weeks after another girl reported a similar assault in the area.

In the earlier incident, a 14-year-old freshman at another Kansas City, Kan., high school told police she was forced at gunpoint into a car and sexually assaulted.

Lab security tightened after 'serious problems' reported

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Briefed in 1996 about possible espionage at the Los Alamos laboratory, top White House national security officials did not determine until almost a year later there were "serious problems" requiring changes at the nuclear weapons labs, officials said.

Concerns were raised after it became clear that laboratory insiders might have been responsible for transmitting sensitive nuclear weapons designs to China in the 1980s. It was not until February 1998, however, that President Clinton imposed new safeguards at the labs, including tighter security checks on foreign visitors to labs and the hiring of more counterintelligence personnel.

The Energy Department brought in a former FBI agent, Edward J. Curran, to head a new counterintelligence office.

The administration doubled funding for Curran's operation in 1999 and has asked for a similar increase next year, to $32 million.

Law enforcement and security officials said it had been known for some time that lab security was lax.

They note neither Hazel O'Leary nor Federico Peña, the previous two energy secretaries, had extensive backgrounds in the agency's defense aspects. O'Leary also pressed for more openness at the labs and promoted visits by foreign scientists.

But Bill Richardson, the new secretary, has focused more attention on counterintelligence and security issues, congressional and law enforcement sources said in interviews Wednesday.

"It was quite clear the labs were enormously porous," said one senior administration official, speaking on condition of anonymity. The Los Alamos lab "was quite open to scientists around the world doing nuclear work."

Contraceptive sponge to be produced, sold again by fall

WASHINGTON, D.C. — The Today Sponge, the most popular over-the-counter contraceptive for women before it was pulled off the market in 1995, is headed back to U.S. drugstores.

A newly founded New Jersey company, Allendale Pharmaceuticals Inc., said on Wednesday it has bought the Today Sponge from its previous manufacturer and hopes to begin selling it again by fall.

"There's still a great need for the sponge," Allendale chief executive Gene Detroyer said.

He said he plans to announce the Today Sponge's return formally at a contraceptive meeting in San Francisco this weekend.

It was good news for family planning groups.

"We're pleased and excited that it's coming back," said Susan Tew of the Alan Guttmacher Institute, which says there aren't enough contraceptive choices for American women.

"Women need different methods at different points in life. ... Certainly it's not for everyone," Tew said. "But those contraceptive sponge users loved that method" before Today disappeared in 1995.

The Food and Drug Administration said there was never any problem with the Today Sponge's safety, a position the agency reiterated on Wednesday.

Instead, then-manufacturer Whitehall-Robins Healthcare decided it would cost too much to upgrade the old plant to meet government safety rules.

Manager leaves Yankees to receive cancer treatment

FORT MYERS, Fla. — New York Yankees manager Joe Torre left the World Series champions Wednesday to undergo treatment for prostate cancer.

There was no immediate word on how advanced the disease was or how long Torre will be away from the team. The Yankees also did not say who will manage in his place or what his course of treatment will be.

"I feel fine, and I am looking forward to taking care of this problem and getting back to work," the 58-year-old manager said.

Added Yankees owner George Steinbrenner: "Joe will handle this situation with the same determination and courage that he has always demonstrated. Our prayers are with him."

Torre told catcher Joe Girardi about the cancer this morning. Girardi informed the rest of the team after the 2 1/2-hour bus ride. Paul O'Neill broke the news to those players going to Bradenton for the game with Pittsburgh.

"The guys were very sad," Girardi said. "It is hard when it hits so close to you. Joe was upbeat. He's a fighter and he will make it through this."

Committee approves new regulation for ATM charges

WASHINGTON, D.C. — The House Banking Committee, tapping into consumer anger, overwhelmingly approved Wednesday a measure that would require ATM surcharges to be disclosed clearly at teller machines.

The panel voted 48-1 to attach the measure to sweeping legislation it was drafting that would remove Depression-era barriers between banks, securities firms and insurance companies by letting them merge.

CES, Chamber team up for job-placement effort

■ Employers use university program to find employees for local part-time jobs.

By LORI OLEEN
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

'Put a Wildcat to Work' is a call to businesses looking for students who want to work part-time.

The program, coordinated by Career and Employment Services, combines publicity efforts of the Manhattan Chamber of Commerce to place K-State students in part-time jobs in the area.

"Part of it is the image that goes with the name of putting a wildcat to work rather than just a part-time job," said Mary Marston, Career and Employment Services assistant director and coordinator of experiential learning.

Marston said the program will show businesses in the community that hiring a student for their part-time needs can be beneficial. She said the Manhattan Chamber of Commerce helps publicize the program in its newsletter.

"It's really important for us to let our members know that they have access to the program," said Sarah Saueressig, Manhattan Chamber of Commerce research and information manager of economic development. "There are 860 businesses and 1,400 chamber representatives who receive the newsletter, so it has the potential to reach a lot of people."

The program's theme was also the theme for the part-time job fair this past fall. Marston said Career and Employment Services has been trying to sell the program, but it has not been as successful as it would like to be in its early stages.

"I think it's just going to be the word of mouth and getting this out to the community so they know it's a free service they can tap for students," Marston said.

Anyone with a part-time job to fill can call, fax, e-mail or fill out a form on the Career and Employment Services home page. Employers can list job information, and then Career and Employment Services will post the position on the part-time job board in the K-State Student Union, on its World Wide Web page or in Holtz Hall, Marston said.

Marston said students can benefit from jobs in the community because they are convenient and can be career-related.

"I'm getting to know what it's going to be like to get out there after I graduate," said Cori Cox, senior in family life and community services. "It's nice to get that experience while you're here in school and before you have to make any major decisions."

Cox works 20-24 hours each week at Riley County Community Corrections.

"It's kind of easing me into the real world, and it's definitely convenient," Cox said.

Marston said the services create a win-win situation. "Students are gaining work-related experience while being able to go to school, and all of them are earning at least some money," Marston said. "It's helping the community in the fact that businesses all need skilled workers and these students can offer them skill as well as expertise in their area."

Saueressig said it is also a way for area businesses to give back to K-State. "We know that Manhattan has some of the best educational opportunities," Saueressig said. "People come out of K-State not only book smart, but with work ethic and the ability to relate to people. It's important to businesses to have these people."

Marston said she eventually would like to combine efforts with the KSU Alumni Association to network among alumni and find jobs for students.

"There are lots of K-State supporters who come up for the ball games, have purple in their offices and probably would do things for K-State if they were simply asked," Marston said.

"I THINK IT'S JUST GOING TO BE THE WORD OF MOUTH AND GETTING THIS OUT TO THE COMMUNITY SO THEY KNOW IT'S A FREE SERVICE THEY CAN TAP FOR STUDENTS."

Elizabeth Dole (left), the former Cabinet member and wife of 1996 Republican presidential candidate Bob Dole, announces at the Polk County Convention Complex in Des Moines, Iowa, that she is setting up an exploratory committee to raise money and gauge support for the 2000 Republican presidential nomination.

Dole forms presidential exploratory group

■ Early polls show strong support for her campaign in 2000 election.

By MIKE GLOVER
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

DES MOINES, Iowa — Elizabeth Dole, the former Red Cross leader who has worked in the administrations of five presidents, joined the list of official Republican presidential hopefuls Wednesday, pledging to be a leader who will "call America to her better nature."

Dole announced that she has formed an exploratory committee to see if she can raise enough money and gain support for a presidential bid. She said she has found "a great American yearning" that she hopes to fill with a campaign.

"We must rekindle a spirit in our hearts, something very American, something still alive but buried beneath a thickening layer of skepticism and doubt," Dole said during her announcement in downtown Des Moines before a cheering crowd of more than 400 supporters. "We must renew faith in the goodness of our nation and a sense in ourselves that each one of us can make a difference."

As she took the step toward seeking the Republican presidential nomination, Dole pointed to experience working with five presidents but tried to distance herself from potential rivals.

"I'm not a politician and, frankly, today that may be a plus," she said.

With her announcement, Dole moves to the first tier of potential Republican contenders.

Most polls have shown Dole and Texas Gov. George W. Bush far ahead of lesser-known potential Republican rivals.

Dole also began airing television commercials Wednesday that aides said would flesh out the themes of a Dole campaign.

"Politics and the politics of governing have become so negative, so paralyzed by special interests that as a people we're beginning to lose faith in our own institutions," Dole said in commercials running in Iowa and New Hampshire.

In her speech Wednesday, Dole took a not-so-concealed jab at the problems that have dogged President Clinton.

"If I run, this will be why-I believe our people are looking for leaders who will call America to her better nature," Dole said.

"Yes, we've been let down, and by people we should have been able to look up to."

Dole brings an impressive résumé to a field of GOP contenders that could reach double digits. She has a prominent and widely recognized name, a wealth of government experience and decades of campaign experience working as a surrogate for her husband, 1996 GOP nominee Bob Dole.

"I've seen many presidential campaigns up close," Dole said. "I know what they entail."

"She's going to bring a grace and a dignity to the race," said Ralph Reed, a consultant and former leader of the Christian Coalition who is offering advice to Bush. "I'm glad she's running. This nominating campaign is shaping into an embarrassment of riches."

Aides to Dole said last week she had decided to form an exploratory campaign. Her schedule takes her on to Arizona and New Hampshire before she heads back to her home in North Carolina.

Iowa's precinct caucuses next February mark the initial test of the presidential nominating season, while New Hampshire has the first primary shortly after that.

Dole has served as head of the Federal Trade Commission and been secretary of labor and secretary of transportation. She also has served as head of the American Red Cross. Some strategists say her Red Cross background insulates her from charges that the Republican Party lacks compassion.

She pointed to that Red Cross experience in her opening pitch to voters.

"In my eight years at the American Red Cross, I saw things that will haunt me the rest of my life," Dole said. "But I also saw the power of the human heart."

She said her travels since leaving the Red Cross in January have left her "buoyed by the goodness of our citizens."

NASCAR is not about driving in circles. It's about racing for position, strategy and trading paint. If Mr. McLeMore would understand it, he would appreciate it as a sport and realize how the people are athletes.

For once, we have consistent refs. Consistently terrible.

This is in regard to Mary VanLeeuwen's column that was printed on Monday. If she's such a man-hater, why doesn't she just come out and admit rather than dancing around the point?

Dear Danedri: I completely agree with your editorial about the need to battle stereotypes. I mean, just look at that Feb. 25 editorial about the greek system written by, um, you.

I just wanted to congratulate the Collegian on the perfect headline that they had for the DiMaggio story. I read other newspaper headlines and they were all really boring. "Joltin' Joe has left and gone away," was by far the best.

How come we got a Joe DiMaggio article on the front, while one of the greatest movie makers of all time, Stanley Kubrick, died last night and there was nothing, absolutely nothing, in the Collegian?

I would like to thank Danedri Thompson for the interpretation of the obvious on stereotypes.

In response to Gayle Spencer's comment about voting. I won't vote because I already feel that the state and federal government takes away too many rights and pass too many laws. Why would I vote to have another student take away more rights and restrict me with more laws?

Did anyone else who voted notice that a write-in candidate and Craig Meinhardt showed the same spot on the election ballot? Way to go on that one.

Arrogant professors who schedule tests for the Friday before spring break and refuse to give make-ups, regardless of the excuse, will get theirs when TEVALS roll around. Mark my words.

With all this talk about a $12 increase in tuition for the library, everyone forgot to mention that out-of-staters will have to pay four times the amount as in-staters for the same thing.

Cowardly opinions are better than no opinions at all.

That SHAPE group is right. There are just too many infectious diseases making spring break dangerous. That's why I'm going rock climbing in the desert.

I can't believe that the administration would allow students to go to school when there was 500-pound bison on the loose, terrorizing students on campus.

Oh my! The bison is in my front yard!

Yeah, I was just wondering who I have to contact to get the bison poop out of my front yard.

When was the last time a woman ran for student body president? Isn't it about time?

Instead of releasing a buffalo every five years, I think the veterinary school needs to release one every year, and make it kind of a running of the bulls tournament.

If Gonzaga doesn't win the NCAA Tournament, the entire thing is rigged.

I find it scary that they want to give the Vet-Med labs a bio warfare facility for studying infectious diseases. They can't even keep track of a bison, how are they going to keep track of anthrax?

The crews that are putting red brick around campus are doing a great job. I think it looks pretty, and it's about time somebody started beautifying the campus.

I totally agree with Steve Barnum about the women's basketball team. I think the women are just as fun if not more fun to watch than the men. When the women's team played in the Big 12 Tournament, I couldn't even find the game on the radio.

The Fourum should be full page. And do you guys have Caller ID?
EDITOR'S NOTE: No.

People talk about how worthless our library is here. But you know, it has the nicest bathrooms on campus. That has to be worth something.

Opposition to supercenter is healthy, but development should proceed

VIEWPOINT

R.A. HARTMAN

Normally, the economic battleground is far away and without meaning. As the fight to keep Manhattan safe from supercenters has shown, sometimes the battle is fought right in our backyard, and the underdog does sometimes come out on top.

Stay alert, for Wal-Mart's vision of a supercenter right here in the Little Apple has not been shattered yet. In fact, its realization is quite inevitable. If growing communities like Manhattan do not understand their destiny, then the Wal-Mart Supercenter will enter these Flint Hills not because it helps Manhattan stay beautiful but because of economic inevitability.

As the courting initially began, there were many arguments, as is inevitable in any relationship. The supercenter was seen as an Ebenezer Scrooge, waiting to exploit Manhattan in any way possible.

Wal-Mart was friendly about it, like a Scrooge with a good public-relations program. This did not hide the fact, though, that a supercenter would ruin Manhattan's small-town atmosphere. Among other things, the supercenter would undersell other smaller stores and eventually run them out of business.

These stores are an important part of Manhattan, and their loss would help homogenize the city into a bunch of chain-stores that aren't really concerned with Manhattan as a city. This trend would remove all the mom-and-pop operations and take with it the individuality they represent.

Yet after all is said and done, the supercenter must be seen as the spearhead of progress. Even when brandished as the plague of small businesses, a supercenter might provide lower prices for consumers. The losing businesses then must accept the fact that they did not prepare themselves for such large-scale competitors.

This weeding out is the same as in the classroom: If the students cannot do the work, they will not receive the reward. A small business that cannot provide for its customers must face this fact. If these businesses cannot provide the lower prices, then why prolong the inevitable?

While unreasonable and drastic change is never healthy, an ignorance of the future is perhaps just as bad. It must be realized that even though the supercenter has not arrived yet, the concept of slashing prices has been around since the Industrial Revolution. Citing the harm of a supercenter does not constitute its rejection, but instead should prompt our preparation.

On a deeper level, objections have been raised to not what the supercenter is, but to what it represents. A supercenter is a vessel for a certain type of mentality and influence. By being the Disneyland of one-stop shopping, it feeds one's vice of immediate gratification and promotes a materialistic culture. Because the essence of the supercenter is convenience, it puts people in the position of not caring about anything but speed and thrift, thus dehumanizing the whole community shopping experience.

As a facet of the community, a supercenter lowers the standard by which shopping involves emotion for emotion's sake. Since everything depends on how cost-effective something is, one's emotional connection to the supercenter experience rests on money, and this relationship leads to modularity, compartmentalization and a lifestyle based on things instead of people.

Unfortunately, these malicious tendencies have not hurt the supercenter's popularity. The fact is, this mentality stems from what is successful and what has worked in the past. It stems from a culture that has allowed Manhattan to rise out of its village days, and the same culture that has prepared every Manhattanite to achieve success outside Manhattan. This mentality is the American dream.

This dream says that those who deserve to survive will survive, and those who don't won't. America is the living example of a self-made nation, and this attitude is exemplified in its economic theory.

The free choice of each consumer is the force that will decide what is successful and what isn't. When small businesses are protected by limiting the customers' choice, it is a conservative move that refuses to face the fate of every bustling, growing town in middle America.

K-State and Manhattan have been in a steady-growth mode for the past five or six years, and this growth should not be bounded, but prepared for and formulated. The forces at work that brought America into the view of the world are the same forces cited as problems by small-town sentimentalists.

Opposition to the supercenter idea can be healthy, but only if it is accepting of the idea that growth is inevitable and that planning for this growth is better than reacting to it.

As this college town sets its sails for the next century, it should contemplate the forces at work in the economy and work to guide Manhattan calmly into the harbors of a capitalistic and consumer-oriented community.

Columnist hits dreaded brick wall — writer's block

There comes a time in all columnists' lives when they hit that brick wall called writer's block and find themselves staring helplessly at a blank computer screen, while behind them the merciless clock ticks off the seconds to impending doom.

It's in that crunch period, between the realization that a cry of "Guilty! Hang 'em all!" won't fill up the full 25 column inches and the sudden awareness that the 1 p.m. deadline is in 20 short minutes and all you've accomplished is retyping your opening sentence in four different ways, that the dedicated political columnist abandons all scruples and turns to that muse of last resort, the personal reflection.

Yes, the personal reflection — wherein your dedicated servant of the written word must hide the fact that he left his bile in his other pants and find ingenious and creative ways to waffle on for at least six paragraphs, weaving amusing commentary, high personal drama, moral significance and sentimental tommyrot into a web sufficiently thick the discerning reader cannot tell that yours truly really doesn't have a damn thing to say.

What better way to ingratiate myself to my readership than to share intimate yet largely irrelevant details of myself in a manner that assures readers that, despite suspicions to the contrary, I am a feeling human just like themselves?

Still, it's not an effort I can just dive into. My personal relationships lack sufficient melodrama to hold any real interest, nor do I particularly feel the need to share them with the faceless readership.

Call it a vestige of my British ancestry, but if you really must find out the details of my personal life, you'll have to root through my garbage can like everybody else.

Nor am I so particularly against anyone or any group that I feel the need to fill this column with unfounded rumors and biased rhetoric. Well, that's not exactly true — suffice it to say that I'm smart enough not to air my prejudices in an environment where I am decidedly in the minority, at least not without some solid ground to stand on. As much as I might love a deluge of fan mail from my faithful readership similar to that which my early columns generated, the current silence from my mail box is preferable to the somewhat disappointing level of debate my more controversial columns received.

Local issues are always good for the desperate writer, particularly in a university where the majority of my readers would have only the faintest connection to local events.

No background on the issue is really necessary, and a county- or statewide perspective is rarely needed. Simply dive into the deep end of your subject matter, try to make the biggest splash you can and hope you don't lose your swim trunks to some local resident with a 20-year perspective on the situation and a willingness to point out annoying details like, well, that you're wrong.

I have been tempted at times to vent my opinions on Wal-Mart, the Anderson Avenue construction and the lack of sidewalks in Manhattan, secure in my lack of knowledge of the bigger picture and confident that anyone likely to contradict me has decided long ago that my columns aren't worth the ink-stained fingers.

Not to say there aren't local issues that I'm qualified to speak on — the cockroaches infesting Jardine Terrace Apartments, for example, fall well within my purview as an entomologist.

Still, even amusing rants of local concern are too close to hard columns. Better to end with the Morally Significant Fable — an old standby for every self-proclaimed font of wisdom from Aesop onwards. It begins with a smattering of personal history — enough to establish my authority to speak on the subject but not so much that others begin to speculate on your motivations. Then comes the embodiment of evil, terrifying in its pasted-on horns, red paint and Wal-Mart brand tail. As this shibboleth dangles and twists upon its string, the author leaps forward in a gallant attempt to save us from ourselves, entangling the poor beast in a net of vague and emotion-filled terms until it collapses under the weight of mixed metaphors and strained analogies, expiring at last from a final thrust of self-righteousness.

As the curtain falls, our brave author leads the audience by the hand into the sunset glow of ringing church bells, waving flags and dancing children, confident that all will be well with the nation. Just remember to tune in next week, boys and girls, and drink your milk before nap time.

Or don't. Call it my stubborn faith in the Collegian readership, but I'm fairly sure there isn't much of a market out there for a post-secondary version of an after-school story. Morality tales might have their place in story books or Sunday school, but I've never felt they should share space with the words of reasoned debate.

I mean, what do people think this is, a column?

User-fee system should replace campuswide fees

Editor,

Throughout the recent elections, the issue of the campus privilege fees has been brought to our attention. These privilege fees have been increasing consistently over the years and have seemed to be getting a little out of hand. We realize many services rely on this funding to operate; however, we feel that the current system of charging all students for privileges they do not use is illogical.

We feel that a more reasonable system where the students pay only for the services that they use would be more beneficial. For example, if students do not use the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex, then why would they be required to pay its fee? They could refrain from paying, and their identification cards would be denied when entering the Rec Complex. We propose that at the beginning of each semester all students will choose the services that they wish to have access to and pay for the entire semester with their tuition bill. This would work at places like the library and Lafene Health Center as well. This would keep these campus benefits funded, and it would make students happier because they would only be paying for what they use.

Many will agree that making students pay for facilities that they don't even use is absurd and is a policy that should not be enforced. This proposal will benefit the students much more than the current system does.

Senate, president should've checked with residents first

Editor,

We are writing in regard to the story published Friday about Student Senate and the Kansas State University Association of Residence Halls. As the executive board of KSUARH, the elected representatives of the residents of our halls, we would like to state our feelings regarding Senate's recent actions.

On March 4, Senate was presented a resolution that requested KSUARH look into the possibility of having our meal plan changed to include a Sunday evening meal instead of a Saturday evening meal in the dining centers. We appreciate the fact that Senate is concerned with the needs of the students who live in the halls, and KSUARH is more than willing to investigate the possibility of a change in the meal plan. We fully understand that this is a resolution, meaning it is simply a recommendation that KSUARH look into this issue.

Our concern is the way KSUARH was not consulted, nor even notified, about this resolution before it was presented. KSUARH is an organization whose responsibilities include representing the interests of the students who live in our halls and presenting and encouraging hall-wide programming for the benefit of our residents. By proposing this resolution without asking KSUARH for input, Senate did not allow KSUARH to perform one of its main responsibilities.

A simple call from Student Body President Tracey Mann, Student Body Vice President Andy Macklin, the on-campus coordinator or a senator to at least notify KSUARH that this issue was being discussed in a Senate meeting would have been appropriate. If KSUARH had been notified, we would have been able to come to Senate and represent the halls.

We are not, in any way, pointing the finger at Mann, Macklin or anyone else. We simply want to address the Student Governing Association's treatment of student organizations. At this time of year, when campaigning for Senate is prominent and elections occur, we would like to see the newly elected student body president, vice president and senators remember the student organizations that directly deal with the students who elect them throughout the year, not just at election time.

KSUARH is interested in working with the other student organizations on our campus. We look forward to the improvement of communication between campus organizations and a mutual respect and willingness to work together that will assure that the students of K-State are having their needs addressed.

— Nick Lander, president and the KSUARH executive board

Manhattan has other games besides miniature golf

Editor,

Manhattan slowly is becoming a gaming community. Most recently, there is talk that miniature golf could join the other games already in Aggieville, such as pub crawling and finding your car. The fate of the course depends on Rusty Wilson, one of the few people who, on occasion, brings good bands to Manhattan. As we all know, the two favorite sports of rock stars are bowling and miniature golf.

The move makes sense. Wilson only is trying to cash in on this gaming sensation sweeping Manhattan like a lot of other organizations have done already. Case in point, the Manhattan City Commission in its decision to expand Anderson Avenue has created an ever-changing obstacle course. With already narrow side streets, this move has definitely heightened the experience.

Both the women's and the men's basketball teams have opted inadvertently for playing their tournament games at home. Never mind the surf and sun of California and Florida, sites of Final Four games, these kids don't want their fans to have to spend all of their financial aid for a trip to see them play at an event where the tickets probably are harder to find than a Clippers highlight.

However, as with all games, there are some cheaters. The main cheat in Manhattan is Parking Services. One of the joys in going on campus is finding a parking space. As of late, Parking Services has been commandeering a great number of metered stalls in Lot A-29 south of the K-State Student Union.

There is no sense in reserving these spaces for dignitaries, guests or dignitary guests. Parking is part of the K-State experience, and there is a sense of false advertising by not letting these people play with the rest of us. If they want to really know K-State, let them find out. I'd call for a boycott, but we'd be boycotting ourselves. Besides, no one would participate.

However, there are other game options in Manhattan, most of which are relatively inexpensive, if not free. There are so many options available that the decisions will be difficult.

K-State's Tony Kitt tries to block the shot of Texas Christian University's Lee Nailon during the first half of Wednesday's first-round NIT game at Bramlage Coliseum. Nailon's inside attack resulted in 22 points, and the Horned Frogs beat the Cats 72-71.

One-point loss to TCU ends Cats' season in first round of tournament

By FRANK FLATON
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Lee Nailon and Texas Christian University stormed into Bramlage Coliseum and dashed the post-season dreams of the K-State men's basketball team Wednesday night.

Despite a fearless Wildcat comeback, Nailon poured in 22 points to rocket TCU into the second round of the NIT and put an end to the Wildcats' season with a 72-71 victory.

The Wildcats finished post-season play after a strong showing in the Big 12 Tournament, but ended their up-and-down season with a 20-13 record. TCU will play in the second round of the NIT after winning its 20th game, to move to 20-10 on the season.

"You know, we got into post-season play, and we won 20 games," K-State head coach Tom Asbury said. "It's probably not what we hoped or wanted. But only one team in this tournament and one team in the other tournament will feel completely fulfilled."

K-State out-rebounded the inside-oriented Horned Frogs, but threw the ball away 17 times and shot just 42 percent from the field, including 13 percent from the three-point arc.

"Every single thing goes back to three for 23," Asbury said. "Three for 23. You are not going to win a one-point game by shooting three for 23."

Junior guard Josh Reid said it wasn't that the Horned Frogs were playing great defense, but that the baskets were just not falling for the Wildcats.

"To tell you the truth, I don't think they were even playing defense," he said. "We just couldn't make our shots tonight. It was like night and day compared to the Big 12 Tournament."

K-State posted three players in double figures as Manny Dies paced the Wildcats again by tossing in 15 points and grabbing 11 rebounds. Reid contributed 12 points and Travis Reynolds poured in 11, a career high for the freshman forward.

Besides Nailon's big game, TCU had other players in double figures, including Ryan Carroll and Prince Fowler with 16 each.

Despite Nailon being below his season average in both points and rebounds, the Wildcats were impressed with his dominance.

"Hell, yeah, he's tough," senior guard/forward Ayome May said. "We doubled up inside and he still scored on us."

TCU head coach Billy Tubbs said he was pleased with his team's efforts.

"Obviously, I thought it was an outstanding win for us," he said. "To come in here and win was a tribute to the guys on our team. We started knocking shots down. That's what the game is all about."

K-State started off slow, hitting just one field goal in the first four minutes, until Dies scored four consecutive baskets, including an explosive slam dunk to put the Cats up 10-6 with 13:22 to go.

After that, the Wildcats quickly put together a 9-3 run in which May buried two consecutive jumpers to take their largest lead of the night. But Nailon and the Horned Frogs stormed back on a 17-2 run to lead 31-25 with 4:20 left to go in the half.

The Wildcats answered to cut the lead to three when Reynolds faked out a Horned Frog defender and buried a jumper from the free-throw line. TCU's Carroll hit a two-pointer with 1:26 to go, and the half ended with the Horned Frogs on top, 38-33.

In the second half, TCU started where it left off, increasing its lead to 43-34 on a Nailon three-pointer. Reid tossed in seven straight points and Dies tossed in a deuce to cut the lead down to three. But the Horned Frogs wouldn't let go of the Wildcats' jugular, and went on a 5-0 run to increase their advantage to nine.

Despite the deficit the Cats wouldn't go away, Reid fired in a three with just more than five minutes to go to cut the lead to five. With five minutes to go, the Cats began to come back, but after Tony Kitt put in two consecutive buckets the Horned Frogs made their foul shots down the stretch and clinched the victory.

With the loss, the Wildcats moved to 4-6 in NIT games and extended their record to 3-2 all-time against the Horned Frogs.

Kitt said he's looking forward to next year, but was not ready to see this one end.

"After all we've been through, to lose in the first round of the NIT is very disappointing," he said. "We are a lot better team than what we showed. The seniors paved the way for us next year. I'm looking forward to this, but I wasn't ready for this one to be over."

Players end with mixed emotions

Seniors end K-State career with home game.

By JOSHUA KINDER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The 72-71 season-ending loss to the K-State Wildcats suffered Wednesday night to the Texas Christian Horned Frogs at Bramlage Coliseum left many of the players with mixed emotions.

K-State senior guard Ayome "Paco" May said if he were to sum up his career at K-State in one word, he would call it "frustrating."

"I mean, it meant a lot to me," May said. "But I've been frustrated for a long time now. On and off the court, there have been a lot of problems I've been having."

May initially left the team prior to the opening of the season due to a stomach illness, but made a triumphant return to the team and assumed a starting role by mid-season.

In the Big 12 Tournament, May loaded the team on his back and posted 13.3 points per game.

In the midst of his late-season scoring May became K-State's 19th leading scorer in history with 990 total points.

"This year is one of the best years I think I've had," May said. "I mean, I had fun. I just went out and had fun. I was just relaxed more and had fun. That's what it's all about."

"I think it was more important for me to come back. I really didn't want to give it up yet. I came back and played pretty well, I think."

With the loss of six seniors, the Cats will look to form a new identity and turn to some younger talent next year. K-State head coach Tom Asbury said he is enthusiastic about next season.

"I'm excited about the nucleus coming back and the new guys coming here," Asbury said.

One of the players Asbury will be counting on is junior forward Tony Kitt, who played a limited amount of time this season as he split time with senior Manny Dies from the bench.

Against the Horned Frogs, Kitt grabbed eight rebounds and scored nine points, including six of the last eight Cat points of the game.

"Tony needs to refine his offense, get a little stronger, and work on his hands," Asbury said. "We need to get his stamina better too. This is the best shape he's ever been in."

Asbury was pleased with the performance that forward Travis Reynolds had in the final game of his freshman campaign. Reynolds scored a career-high 11 points while going five of six from the field.

"I think he really played well tonight," Asbury said. "Travis really progressed and stepped up as the season went on. We need to put a little weight on him and work on his perimeter shooting as well, but overall I'm pleased with the strides he took this season."

K-State leads the all-time series with Creighton, 10-3, including a 6-1 edge in games played in Manhattan. A win would be the K-State women's team 100th all-time win in Bramlage Coliseum. All five Wildcat starters will return next season. The winner of the game will play the winner of the Arkansas State/New Hampshire game. All games in the WNIT, including the championship, are played on the homecourts of one of the participating schools.

TODD STEWART/COLLEGIAN

By NICK BRATKOVIC
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

It's do-or-die time for the K-State Women's basketball team Thursday.

The Cats, 15-13 on the season, take on Creighton, 16-13, in the opening round of the Women's National Invitational Tournament. K-State coaches and players are eager to get back on the court after losing in the second round of last week's women's Big 12 Tournament to eventual champion Texas Tech 74-55.

"It's time to forget about that loss, play hard and get the win on Thursday," K-State forward Brandy Harris said.

This season the Cats have been led in scoring by forward Nicky Ramage. Ramage has been the consistent player in the paint, playing in all 29 games and averaging 13.8 points per game. She has also led the team in scoring 13 times.

Entering the WNIT, Harris, who averaged 9.9 points per game, said the team is playing good basketball.

"We were really up and down this season," Harris said. "But we ended the season pretty well."

Harris said all of the ups and downs the team experienced made her much tougher mentally.

Although they have not played each other since 1991, K-State and Creighton have some common opponents. Both teams played Iowa State, Kansas, Nebraska and Drake.

"In some respects they are a cross between Iowa State and Oklahoma," K-State head coach Deb Patterson said. "Creighton likes to push the ball up the court and play a high-paced game, Patterson said."

"What we do know about them is that they are an extremely aggressive team with a tremendous work ethic and a balanced attack," she said.

The Bluejays are coming off a run in the Missouri Valley Conference in which, as a No. 7 seed, they defeated No. 2-seed Drake and No. 6-seed Indiana State, before losing in the finals against Evansville 72-75. This season Creighton is averaging 40 rebounds per game. Patterson said the Cats need to do a good job of rebounding.

"We are going to need to box out all five of their players and there is no time to rest," Patterson said.

Creighton is led in scoring by

Although they have not played each other since 1991, K-State and Creighton have some common opponents. Both teams played Iowa State, Kansas, Nebraska and Drake.

Kristie Spanheimer, who is averaging 11.1 points per game, and as a team, the Bluejays this season averaged 67 points per game. Patterson said to be successful against Creighton, the team needs to play solid defense.

"We are going to need to defend extremely well, they are a tough defensive team," Patterson said. "Creighton has the ability to score."

Patterson said the Cats are excited about the prospect of postseason play for the second time in three years.

Patterson said a tournament like the WNIT forces a team to prepare for the next opponent quickly.

"There is an added responsibility of being able to adjust to another team on short notice," Patterson said.

K-STATE'S ROAD TO A WNIT TITLE

K-State's women's basketball team has to win three games to advance to the WNIT semifinals. All games will be played at the homecourts of one of the participating schools. This is just K-State's fourth of the bracket.

I scream, you scream

By REED DUNN
KANSAS STATE COLLEGE

In 1923, the Kansas College Creamery scooped up the first serving of K-State-produced ice cream in the basement of Waters Hall.

The facility relocated to Call Hall in 1964 to provide a modern dairy processing plant for making dairy products and a laboratory setting for students. Student use of the facility is for graduate research and for classes such as Dairy Processing. Two full-time employees produce all the fluid milk, cheese, butter and ice cream at the plant.

Sri Adapa, plant manager, said the facilities are open year-round and are comparable to others of their kind.

"We are basically like any 12-month operation, but we are closed on Saturdays and Sundays and university-observed holidays," Adapa said.

Each weekday, the plant processes a different product. Two of these days are strictly used for the processing of fluid milk. The other days alternately produce salted and unsalted butter, six varieties of cheese and 40 flavors of ice cream.

Erin Ferdinand, junior in animal science, sells the dairy products at the Dairy Bar, next door to the plant. The parlor sells the ice cream by the half gallon and by the scoop. Flavors include Swiss Chocolate Almond, Purple Pride and the common chocolate and vanilla.

"There are quite a variety of flavors that are unique and you cannot find anywhere else," Ferdinand said.

The number of flavors varies depending on the time of year. Some flavors such as Pumpkin and Eggnog are seasonal, Adapa said, and others are added to the product list and served on a trial basis.

"Usually every year we come up with at least two new flavors," Adapa said. "If they are appealing to people, we keep them. If not, we phase them out."

Along with dairy sales at the parlor, meat from Weber Hall and eggs from the poultry farm are sold. The shop is open from 9:30 a.m. to 5:15 p.m. Monday through Thursday, and until 6 p.m. on Friday.

Renee Westgate, Dairy Bar manager, said a large portion of customers at Call Hall are not on-campus students.

"Most of our customers are alumni," Westgate said. "We have more of an older clientele."

The milk comes from a farm of 250 K-State owned dairy cows and is carried to the plant in a tank truck.

Ferdinand said she likes the idea of keeping the operation as much within campus limits as possible. She said she thinks this makes the operation a special feature to the campus, offering quality products to both students and to the public.

"I like it just because I know it's fresh," Ferdinand said. "It's convenient, and the number one reason is high quality. It comes from right on campus and you can get it right here."

Along with the Dairy Bar, products are distributed and served at dining halls on campus.

The K-State Student Union and a couple of Manhattan convenience stores, including Dara's Fast Lane, also purchase Call Hall ice cream.

Adapa said the profit generated from plant sales is recycled back into the animal science sector of the College of Agriculture for research, teaching and upgrading the facility.

"The money doesn't go anywhere," Adapa said. "It stays right here for research, so it's like directly supporting K-State."

Adapa said he encourages students who have not tried the products to make the walk to the north side of campus for a taste of the treats.

"If they have never tried it before, they should," Adapa said. "If they do, I am 100-percent sure they will come back."

UPC poetry reading will be tribute to Dickinson

By CRISTY ANDERSON
KANSAS STATE COLLEGE

A tribute will be made to a well-known American poet tonight.

"A Tribute to Emily Dickinson" is the theme of the Union Program Council's third poetry reading this semester. The poetry reading will be at 8 tonight at Java Espresso & Bakery in Aggieville.

Bronwyn Rounds, junior in fine arts and UPC Arts Committee chairwoman, said the committee picked Dickinson because of her popularity.

"We found that when we put a theme to the poetry readings, people are more likely to read," Rounds said.

"This is the first time we've had a female poet as our inspiration," she said. Mark Skochdopole, owner of Java, said he thought the theme of the event would draw crowds.

"Dickinson is popular, and I'm sure the theme will bring out a lot of people," Skochdopole said. "When a poet is emphasized at a poetry reading, more people tend to come out."

Paul Donovan, program adviser for arts committee, said he thought Dickinson is one of the more well-known female poets. Her viewpoint on life is edgy and a lot of students go for that, he said.

"Dickinson's poetry is still relevant to today's issues, so we wanted to tip our hats to her," Donovan said.

Rounds said people at the poetry reading can read poems by Dickinson or poems of their choice. The poetry reading will be an open program, and there is no list to follow, she said.

"A majority of people read works they've written or works by other authors," Rounds said. "There are a lot of people who write poetry and a lot of people who like to hear it. This is an opportunity for them to get exposure."

She said many novices get up to read a poem for the first time with shaking hands and quivering voices, but after people get up and read a poem one time, they usually get up and read again and again.

"I would encourage everyone to come to the poetry reading, even if you have never read poetry for an audience before," Donovan said. "It's a very welcoming environment."

Rounds said that at past poetry readings, a lot of students have attended, as well as some faculty and a few community members. The poetry reading takes place at a coffee shop because it has a nice atmosphere and people can get drinks and refreshments, she said.

"It is laid back and open to everyone," Skochdopole said. "People buy a lot of drinks, and this helps us out."

The final UPC poetry reading of this semester will be at 8 p.m. April 15 at Java. The theme will be "My Life is a Bitter Hell, and It's All Your Fault."

'An American Sunset' presented today as part of Lunchbag series

By GIGI MCCALL
KANSAS STATE COLLEGE

K-State students will challenge their audience members to examine their societal roles when they present their interpretation of "An American Sunset" at 11:30 a.m. today in the Purple Masque Theatre.

The performance is part of the spring 1999 Lunchbag Theatre series.

Written by James Prideaux, "An American Sunset" is a satirical comedy that questions society's blind acceptance of traditions, said Karl Rutherford, graduate student in speech and director of the production.

"The play causes people to stop and think about when they might be blindly following societal rules without pondering whether or not they should," Rutherford said.

While Rutherford and his cast members said they wouldn't give away the comical production's plot, they did say the play ends with an unexpected twist that instills a clear message.

"What makes this production so interesting is it's so off-beat," said Marilee Rose, sophomore in theater and cast member in the production. "It comes as such a surprise."

To participate as an actor or director of a Lunchbag Theatre production, students must be enrolled in either Practice in Acting or Practice in Directing, which are both upper-level theater classes, Rutherford said.

Heather Healy, graduate student in theater and cast member, said she thought the Lunchbag Theatre series is original because it provides an opportunity for student performers to put together their own interpretation of a work.

"Theater is an amazing experience," Healy said.

"It's the connection you have with the audience. Theater teaches and helps us learn about each other," she said.

Lew Shelton, associate professor of speech communication, theater and dance, said the Lunchbag Theatre series is used to showcase students' talents and abilities of being able to direct or act in their own production for an audience.

Shelton said, however, he was discouraged to know that even though the students spend a great deal of time working on the show, they only have the chance to perform it for an audience once.

Although there is only one performance of each show, Rose said, turnout for the performances usually is good.

"The theater is three-quarters full most of the time," Rose said, "which probably means we're doing something right."

Admission to the Lunchbag Theatre series is free.

Kidd, Beel proud of campaign effort

By LAUREN POSLADEK
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Willis Kidd and running mate Adam Beel's grassroots presidential campaign was mowed down Wednesday night.

Kidd said he was disappointed he won't be in the runoff, but said he accomplished part of his goal by bringing attention to common sense ideas from common people.

Kidd and Beel finished third of the seven presidential tickets, behind the pairs of Jason Heinrich and Gabe Eckert, and Leo Prieto and Chris Bainter. Kidd and Beel received 210 votes, 7.4 percent of the final vote total.

Several friends and supporters milled around the Alpha Gamma Rho house waiting for the news.

After receiving the phone call with the results, Kidd said he was disappointed, but proud of the effort they put into the campaign.

"It was a valiant effort, and we had fun doing it," Kidd said. "I am disappointed we didn't make the top two, but I'm happy it's over."

Kidd said the reason they ran was to bring important issues to light and to add a different type of candidate to the mix of presidential bids.

"We saw issues on campus that needed to be addressed, and we figured there should be a common person running that wasn't a politician," he said.

The issues in their platform included a universal account for all campus fees, student choice on how $1 per credit hour of tuition is spent each year, and additional lights on campus for increased safety.

Michael Springer, junior in agricultural economics, said it was good to have a different type of candidate running this year.

"They added a down-home, common-people approach to the elections this year," Springer said. "They are just successful students who haven't been politically involved before. Their success shows that word of mouth and good issues can do a lot on this campus."

Brian Ganske, junior in agronomy, said Kidd and Beel's campaign platform addressed issues that are important to the student body.

"They brought out some good issues that should be addressed," Ganske said. "I am disappointed they didn't make the runoff because I thought they had a great platform."

Both Kidd and Beel said they were pleased with the number of candidates this year.

"All of the candidates had good ideas, every last one of them," Kidd said.

Even though they won't participate in the runoff, Kidd said they will remain active by campaigning for Prieto and Bainter.

"They are the most down-to-earth

Wooten, Shea say voter turnout disappointing

By ANNETTE SWEET
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Despite the flash and flair of their campaign, Rick Wooten and Aaron Shea said students still didn't take any notice of their campaign or the election process.

Wooten and Shea, said they had a good time running for student body president and vice president. The candidates finished fifth, with 140 of the 2,841 total votes.

"We just wanted to put the student back into student body," Shea said. "Wooten and I tried to not just draw attention to us, but to the campaign process itself."

Both running mates said they were disappointed by the lack of support and the lack of voters. They both said that, if anything, they wanted to get out and have fun while getting more people involved.

Their main disappointment, they said, was that voting wasn't more visible and accessible for students.

"They need more places to go besides what was used for voting," Shea said. "Some people just walked down the stairs of the K-State Student Union, not even taking notice of the tables because they were way in the back."

Both running mates said they will be supporting Leo Prieto and Chris Bainter in the runoff because they said Prieto and Bainter seem to be more honest, genuine people.

"I felt more comfortable talking to them," Shea said.

Shea said what they had hoped to accomplish was increasing voter turnout.

"We are very disappointed with the results, not just with our outcome. Some people weren't aware that an election was going on," Shea said. "We had been talking to some people today, and they hadn't even went to vote."

Wooten, Shea and their supporters kicked back and played pool at Fast Eddy's while they waited for the results.

"I am pretty disappointed in the outcome," Jim Hull, freshmen in finance, said. "I think they had some pretty good ideas."

Before the results were announced, some supporters said they felt there would be a runoff, and Wooten and Shea would be in it.

"I really thought they had a chance to make it into the runoff," Chris Born, senior in business, said. "They were definitely the funnest candidates who were real people."

Wooten and Shea said they are not down and out. One of their issues, overall campus beautification by way of a fountain between Seaton Hall and the Union, is something for which they want to continue to push.

"We are thinking of staging a sit-in/hunger strike," Wooten said. "We will sit by President Wefald's office until some action takes place."

Both said their overall experience was positive.

"I think the most rewarding aspect of this whole process was just getting more involved and actually try and do something," Wooten said.

Velasquez, Klein thankful, eager to get back to studies

By DANICA COTO
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

It would have been inappropriate if Aaron Velasquez and Brad Klein had complained. After all, their slogan encouraged students to act and not complain.

And 91 students listened and voted. The call came in at 10:05 p.m. A Porter's owner with a slightly puzzled look on his face handed the phone over to Klein, a sophomore in family studies, human services and social work.

"We are very thankful to play the game, and it's a shame we didn't win," Velasquez, senior in electrical engineering, said.

The two candidates arrived at Porter's at 7:45 p.m. Velasquez ordered a dean martini to celebrate what he called "the non-victory party," while Klein, his running mate and designated driver, ordered a Coke. Surrounding them were four friends.

Karen Leisner, senior in family studies and human services, said the candidates were perfect for the job.

"They represent the whole student body because they don't have a specific agenda. They are your normal, down-to-earth 'let's represent everybody' people," Leisner said.

Scott Guggisberg, freshman in computer engineering, said he agreed.

"They have time enough to answer calls and implement some things.

They're not in it for themselves," Guggisberg said. "They're not in the politics game war. They're not selfish, and they're not involved in any special interest groups."

Klein said he learned one main thing.

"That the media will help you out if you do crazy things," Klein said, referring to a front-page picture last week in which Velasquez was dressed in a cow costume. "If you want to do anything in life, you have to have fun first."

Heinrich and Eckert were very slick talkers. They are respectable people, but they didn't have any fun compared to us."

Velasquez said there was one question for those candidates. "Did they enjoy it?" he said.

Velasquez declined to comment on whom he would vote for in the runoff, and Klein said he just wanted whatever was best for the university.

Both candidates said they don't regret anything, but that they would have liked to see more people vote.

As for future plans, Velasquez said he would like to see Klein and another running mate run for office again because he will be graduating. But Klein said he was not even thinking about that.

"I don't think that far in advance — day by day, week by week," Klein said.

They said they didn't have any plans after Porter's. Both said they had to get back to their studies and concentrate on homework.

Velasquez said he wanted to wish the four candidates good luck in the runoff.

"I don't regret anything," he said. "We had fun. You can't take it that seriously and do that much work."

Chris McCarthy and Chris Masters speak with friends gathered at Bobby T's Bar & Deli after finding out they took fourth place in the election for student body president and vice president.

Masters hopes new president fulfills promises from campaign

By JENNIFER RYAN
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

After receiving their election results, vice presidential candidate Chris McCarthy said he and his running mate Chris Masters hoped whoever wins the presidential runoff will follow through with their campaign promises and do a good job.

Masters, junior in business management and information systems, took the call notifying him of their loss at Bobby T's Bar & Deli. They finished with 6.2 percent of the vote.

"Take out the greek factor and maybe we would have had a chance," Masters said.

They said their campaign focused on student concerns that have been unresolved in the past, such as parking concerns and funding for Hale library.

McCarthy, junior in physical anthropology, said the campaign went well. It was a hard but fun week, he said.

"We were tired of seeing problems not being addressed. We saw it, the people around us saw it, and we decided to do something about it," McCarthy said.

"WE WERE TIRED OF SEEING PROBLEMS NOT BEING ADDRESSED. WE SAW IT, THE PEOPLE AROUND US SAW IT, AND WE DECIDED TO DO SOMETHING ABOUT IT."

— CHRIS MCCARTHY
VICE PRESIDENTIAL CANDIDATE

The number of candidates running didn't bother Masters during the campaign, he said. He said he sees it as a positive change.

"I think it shows that more people care," Masters said.

Both said they would support Leo Prieto and Chris Bainter in the runoff. No matter who wins, they said, the pair will work with the new president and vice president to get new ideas passed.

"We've talked to both candidates, and I really like them and think they'll do a good job. We really didn't get a good vibe from Heinrich and Eckert," McCarthy said.

Supporter Kevin Fowler, senior in golf course management, said that he was very proud of Masters and McCarthy.

"The campaign went really well. These guys put a lot of hard work into it. I'm disappointed in fourth place — I figured we'd do a little better," Fowler said.

"They're already tossing around the idea of running again next year, and I'll be there to support them again."

VanNest, Olson receive lowest vote total

By CAIT PURINTON
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Now that it's all over, student body presidential candidate Justin VanNest and vice presidential candidate Amanda Olson are going to catch up on what they've missed the most during the past couple of weeks: sleep.

"It's over, it's over, it's over. I can sleep," Olson said.

VanNest and Olson received 60 votes during the elections, putting them in seventh place.

Olson, freshman in fine arts, said she felt their problem was they were on the bottom of the ballot.

VanNest said he was disappointed the election had a lot to do with money and T-shirt sales. He said he was also disappointed with the voter turnout.

"I'm disappointed more people didn't vote," he said.

Before receiving word they had lost the race, VanNest, senior in political science, said he just wanted people to vote.

"Win or lose, I want to make sure people exercise their right to vote," he said. 2,841 students voted in the student body presidential and vice presidential election.

VanNest and Olson said they are supporting Prieto and Bainter in the runoff.

"We feel they're fair and more student-friendly," Olson said.

VanNest said their week went well despite all the stress.

"It takes a lot of work to run for student body president and vice president. We've made it a point to do most of the work ourselves," he said.

The pair came up with idea of running when they were joking around about it one day.

"Then a couple of days later we said 'Hey, maybe we should run for student body president and vice president because there are some serious issues the need to be addressed,'" VanNest said.

Shane Holt, freshman in agricultural journalism, said he supported VanNest and Olson because he agrees with their platform on increasing faculty salaries so K-State can get higher quality instructors.

"I'm really in support for getting higher wages for our teachers," Holt said.

He said the influence of a female candidate is beneficial because it gives Student Governing Association a good balance. A good balance would have also come from having a young vice president and older president, he said.

Holt said since Olson is a freshman, she would have been able to bring in new ideas, and VanNest as a senior would have contributed campus experience to create a balance between views.

VanNest and Olson said they just wanted to rest Wednesday evening when election totals came in, so they hosted their election party in the basement of Eclipse Coffee Brewhouse with only a few friends.

"We've had fun, I can say that. But it's been stressful," VanNest said.

PRIETO

said. "That's going to really go to our favor," he said.

Prieto said he also will depend on the same people who voted for him this time, although it might be tough getting them to go vote again.

"It's going to be hard," he said. "It's going to be difficult getting the same people out to vote again."

Bainter said he hopes people evaluate both tickets before they vote.

Supporters said they believed Prieto and Bainter are the best people for the job.

"I believe in his issues. I think he has good ideas," Leasha Carpenter, graduate student in Spanish, said. "I think he's all about supporting the people."

BANTER

Amber Bloomfield, senior in Spanish and Latin American studies, said Prieto has proven his leadership abilities.

"He's just the type of guy who listens to everything and takes it to heart," she said.

"He'll do anything he can to make it happen. His natural high is to make people happy," Bloomfield said.

Angela Matthews, senior in history and secondary education, said people need to get out and vote for Prieto and Bainter.

"If there ever was an underdog, Leo Prieto is it. He's really pulled himself up by the bootstraps," she said. "Everything he has he's worked hard for. He's such an incredible hard worker who wasn't born with a silver spoon in his mouth and that truly makes him for the people, by the people."

Carlos Contreras, one of Prieto and Bainter's main supporters, said he knew it was going to come to a runoff.

"I was hoping for a landslide victory, which was actually a dream of mine," he said. "But we're prepared to take it on."

"Leo can really lead this university into the 21st century," Contreras said.

candidates left," Kidd said. "I told Leo last week that we'd support him 100 percent."

Kidd and Beel won't be leading the student body in the fall, but they both have other plans to keep busy.

Beel said he is going to be part of the livestock judging team, and Kidd said he would be busy with different campus organizations as well as his new business selling cattle embryos to breeders.

Kidd said he hoped the issues brought up in his campaign still would be addressed in the future.

"I've always thought these issues were important," he said.

"And I certainly hope they will come up in student government next year or soon after," Kidd said.

Professor offers advice on cultural awareness

By CAIT PURINTON
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Do Sup Chung said he considers himself a novelty in the United States.

When he came to this country from Korea in 1954, people treated him like something they had never seen before.

"I was truly a minority in this country," he said. "I was treated like a novelty."

Chung, professor of biological and agricultural engineering, spoke in the K-State Student Union on Thursday as part of Asian-American Awareness Month about his perspective on being an Asian-American.

Chung said that while he was an undergraduate at Purdue University, he was invited to visit a small farming community in Indiana with a population of 500.

No one there ever had seen an Asian-American person before.

"The whole town showed up to see me," he said.

Chung said another time he felt like a novelty in 1959 in his advanced thermodynamics class. He said the man sitting next to him kept looking at him. Chung asked if his face was funny and if that was why the man kept staring.

The man turned red with embarrassment and said he was from Fort Scott, Kan., and had never seen a Korean.

Chung shook his hand, introduced himself and said, "Now you have not only seen an Oriental, but you can tell all your friends in Fort Scott you touched it, too."

Chung's red-faced classmate later became his roommate, best friend and best man in his wedding.

Chung said he has never experienced blatant discrimination but knows people who have.

He said people must put discrimination behind them and get along with people of all ethnic backgrounds.

"That's the key, we cannot be isolated in ourselves," he said.

When Chung was hired as an assistant professor of agricultural engineering, affirmative-action laws didn't exist.

"They hired me as an individual who can make a contribution," he said.

When companies use affirmative action as part of their hiring process, Chung said he thought some minorities who are hired feel exploited by the law, and non-minorities think it is unfair.

"I believe this is true to a certain extent," he said. "We must be excellent for others and for ourselves. We should try to succeed in our workplace based on ability."

Chung has kept many aspects of his Korean culture and said it is not hard to maintain his heritage in a different country. The age an immigrant comes to a country is the factor that determines how much native culture the immigrant will keep, he said.

Even though he has been in the country since the 1950s, Chung said he never intended to stay.

"I came for education — then I planned to go back to Korea," he said.

The Immigration Act of 1965 forced Chung and his wife to make the decision to stay or leave. At the time, international students were given a year and a half after finishing school to get practical experience before returning to their home. Chung was denied that and was told to apply for a greencard or go back.

His wife still was working on her doctorate, and the couple had two daughters, who were born in Manhattan, making them natural citizens.

He said this country has been nice to his family but he always will be identified as Korean. Therefore, he offered advice to Asian-Americans to break racial stereotypes.

First, he said they should know the struggle and inequalities of the past.

"We as Asian-Americans owe a lot to Dr. Martin Luther King Jr.," he said.

King's civil-rights movement benefited all minorities, Chung said.

Secondly, Chung said Asian-Americans should attempt to maintain a bicultural identity. The mistake he regrets most deeply is not having taught his daughters the Korean language.

He also said minorities should not live in ethnic enclaves.

"Do not choose to alienate yourself from the majority group because of fear or because you're afraid of racism and discrimination," Chung said. "Just as we do not want others to alienate us because of our ethnicity, we shouldn't alienate others."

Cindy Seto, Asian-American Union historian and senior in finance, said Chung's speech was good because it helped students understand where minorities are coming from and educated people about diversity.

"If we can learn it now while we're in college, we won't be culture-shocked in the workplace," Seto said.

Ria Kim, AASU president and senior in human resource management and marketing, said Chung's lecture taught the campus and the community about his Korean background and created awareness of how diversity can affect real-life situations.

"Overall, his personal perspective on his experience gave us education and told us how to be a majority or a minority and to be aware of other cultures and ethnic backgrounds," she said.

Peace plan rejected amid Kosovo fighting

By KATARINA KRATOVA
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia — A top U.S. negotiator failed to persuade Yugoslavia's president to sign onto a new Kosovo peace deal Wednesday. Along the border, Yugoslav forces backed by tanks torched the homes of ethnic Albanians and sent hundreds fleeing.

Three bodies were found — at least two of them men who had been shot in the back in Ivaja, a hamlet near the Macedonia border where homes that had been burned still smoldered. Residents said neither was a rebel in the separatist Kosovo Liberation Army.

A neighbor said one of the victims had called on a mobile phone to say that Serb police were coming into the village and that residents were going to make a run for it.

Fighting on the day that Yugoslav President Slobodan Milosevic met with U.S. peace envoy Richard Holbrooke also broke out near Vucitrn, 18 miles from Pristina, the provincial capital of Kosovo. Reporters at the scene said government forces were backed by 10 tanks and two armored personnel carriers.

Holbrooke pressed Milosevic to accept a peace plan or risk NATO strikes during more than four hours of face-to-face meetings Wednesday, but instead the hard-line Yugoslav leader said afterwards: "Foreign troops have no business in our country."

Milosevic said the U.S.-sponsored peace plan is a good basis for a political settlement of the Kosovo crisis.

He continued to reject the key provision — the deployment of NATO troops to police it.

More than 2,000 people have died and 300,000 have been displaced in a year of fighting between Yugoslav troops and ethnic Albanians in Kosovo.

Milosevic said he believes stationing NATO forces is tantamount to Western intervention in Yugoslavia, made up of Serbia and the much-smaller Montenegro. Kosovo is a Serbian province, but 90 percent of its 2 million people are ethnic Albanians.

The U.S.-sponsored deal calls for wide autonomy for Kosovo Albanians but not the independence that they seek and for 28,000 NATO troops — including 4,000 Americans — to police a settlement.

Holbrooke had been instrumental in forging a Bosnia peace deal with Milosevic in 1995 and a shaky ceasefire in Kosovo last October that has unraveled with new fighting this year.

This plan was even in trouble with Kosovo Albanians, who were apparently backsliding on their pledge to sign the deal. A KLA representative in London, Pleurat Sejdiu, said the rebels would "not sign up while the war is going on in Kosovo."

The plan also requires the rebels to disarm, a serious obstacle for the secessionist-minded guerrillas.

In London, another senior U.S. official said Kosovo is a significant challenge to the willingness of NATO, Russia and other former communist states to work together.

"Kosovo is a moment of testing for the alliance and partners alike," U.S. Deputy Secretary of State Strobe Talbott said at the end of a three-day conference marking the 50th anniversary of NATO.

With the Kosovo talks resuming Monday in Paris, diplomatic efforts for an agreement intensified.

Foreign Minister Igor Ivanov of Russia, a Serb ally, was expected Thursday in Belgrade.

Reflecting the difficulties following the first round of talks in Rambouillet, France, an ethnic Albanian official who is part of their negotiating team said his delegation would return to France only to sign the agreement — not negotiate.

"The agreement reached in Rambouillet can only have technical changes," Fehmi Agani said.

"It is unacceptable to start negotiations all over again in Paris, as the Serb side insists," Agani said.

Community colleges back higher ed plan

By LEW FERGUSON
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — Community college leaders Wednesday threw their support solidly behind a Senate plan for changing the way Kansas' higher education system is managed, giving the proposal a boost toward likely committee endorsement.

Presidents of three of the state's 19 two-year colleges and trustees of three others told the Senate Education Committee they like the plan. They said it provides the best opportunity to improve coordination among institutions that they have seen in 25 years of efforts to restructure the system.

They expressed concerns about the work load it would impose on a reconstituted Kansas Board of Regents, which would take over supervision of all post-secondary institutions. They also were concerned whether community colleges would have fair representation on the board and whether adequate state funding would follow.

But, as Jackie Vieth, president of Butler County Community College, summed up the colleges' position, "While this is not ideal, it is the best proposal we have seen. If we are all under one board, there has to be better coordination."

Also testifying on the bill were Presidents Ed Berger of Hutchinson Community College and James Grote of Seward County Community College, and Trustees Darrell Shumway of Pratt Community College, J.B. Webster of Barton County Community College and Jerry Allison of Independence Community College.

Also appearing was Lt. Gov. Gary Sherrer, who headed Gov. Bill Graves' task force that studied the governance issue last year and proposed a plan.

Sherrer also gave strong endorsement to the Senate plan, saying it embodies the concepts of the governor's task force "in a more efficient form."

The task force recommended creating a new coordination council and board to oversee the community colleges. The Senate plan, developed by Sens. Christine Downey, D-Inman, and Tim Emert, R-Independence, puts those functions all under a revamped nine-member Board of Regents.

The Senate committee will hear from representatives of the state's 11 vocational schools and technical colleges on Thursday, then begin working the bill.

Chairwoman Barbara Lawrence, R-Wichita, named a subcommittee comprised of herself, Downey, Emert and Dave Kerr, R-Hutchinson. It will meet Friday to propose refinements.

Lawrence said the committee will work on the bill Monday and Tuesday, and she wants an endorsement vote by the end of Tuesday's meeting.

Berger, who heads Hutchinson Community College, said if a person were to design a system of higher education for Kansas, "It would come much closer to looking like what is being proposed in Senate Bill 345 than the disjointed system that we currently have."

Grote, president of Seward County, for the things that will affect them, they'll go back," Reser said.

Eckert said he and Heinrich will continue to focus on their issues and not bring any new surprises to the campaign.

"We're going to continue to get the word out and to get people back out to vote," he said.

Reser described Heinrich and Eckert as the perfect pair and as strong leaders.

"Leo would do a good job, but I know Jason, and I know he'd give 100 percent," Reser said.

Eckert said he and Heinrich are confident about the issues they've been focusing on during their campaign, and they're confident people will continue to support them because their issues affect everyone.

"I'm excited to get out and get more people to vote and to talk to more people about our issues," Eckert said.

Ashley said voter turnout for the runoff election is typically less than in the general election.

"It's usually a little less," he said. "People don't want to vote twice."

Ashley said this year's voter turnout was 50 or 60 people short of last year's total. His goal of 4,000 voters wasn't met.

"My personal goal wasn't met," he said. "We came close to last year — it's decent I guess."

Coordinator of Student Activities and Services Gayle Spencer said she was disappointed with voter turnout.

"I thought we would have a better turnout with more candidates," Spencer said.

Ashley said he thought voting numbers were down because there was a lack of issues this year.

"There weren't any issues," he said. "Last year there were more driving issues that candidates hopped on. It was frankly boring."

Wednesday's voting totals were double Monday and Tuesday's combined total.

"I'm happy about today, doubling turnout in one day," Ashley said Wednesday night.

Student Body President Tracey Mann, who won his office in a runoff last spring, said the ticket that is most organized to remobilize its people to vote has the best chance to win.

He said that's what won it for him last year.

Mann said he and Student Body Vice President Andy Macklin took soda to the architecture students in Seaton Hall at midnight and doughnuts to engineering students in Durland Hall before the runoff.

"We did a lot more chalking the second time around, too," he said.

The main factor in the runoff election is keeping supporters fired up and enthusiastic, Mann said.

"Maybe try to be innovative to reach voters, especially candidates who didn't make it, to vote for you," he said.

Heinrich said having a big lead over his opponents doesn't mean supporters don't need to work hard at encouraging people to vote in the runoff.

"It's not over yet," he said. "We've got a long way to go."

Polls open at 8 a.m. Monday and will be located in the K-State Student Union and Derby and Kramer dining centers. Votes will be counted and the results announced Monday night.

House to review higher ed bill

By DANICA COTO
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

House members will review a bill next week that calls for restructuring higher education governance in Kansas. The bill is being reviewed by the Senate and has the support of community college leaders, vocational schools and technical colleges.

Rep. Ralph Tanner, chairman of the House Education Committee, said the bill will provide a great deal of uniformity and quality of education to the state, in addition to improving salaries and providing tax relief to community colleges.

"It gives promise of an improved product," Tanner said.

The Board of Regents and Board of Education still would exist because a constitutional amendment would be needed to create new bodies, but the bill specifies that three subcommittees would be created under regents: a public universities committee, a community colleges committee and a coordinating committee.

Senate Majority Leader Tim Emert, R-Independence, said there is no one entity to oversee all of higher education and no mechanic for strategic planning.

"It's a matter of a lack of statewide coordination of higher education. It's been studied so long and so often that

Bill would provide uniformity among Kansas universities, community colleges people want to solve it," Emert said.

Although community college leaders said they were concerned about tax relief and an increased workload for regents, Emert said they were supportive.

"With my bill, there aren't any disadvantages," Emert said.

K-State President Jon Wefald said he could not comment on the bill until it was approved.

Sheila Frahm, executive director of Kansas Association of community college trustees, said there will be several advantages if the bill is passed.

The first is a centralized database for a more efficient collection of data that allows schools to know the success of students, what jobs they obtain after graduation and their success of completion. The second advantage is increased communication from one kind of school to another, along with a dependency on a central voice for all higher education. Another advantage is the ability of schools to coordinate courses of study so a student can transfer easily from one school to another.

Talat Rahman, Faculty Senate president, said this bill will help students who benefit from going to a community college and decide to continue their studies at a university.

"Community colleges have a particular role, which is different from regents institutions. If this bill doesn't introduce more bureaucracy, it will be good for everybody," Rahman said. "As a faculty member, our main goal is to provide quality education. There will be a lot more examination of what courses are offered by the different units. It helps us evaluate how we teach."

Frahm said she disagreed with Emert, however. She said there continues to be two main disadvantages for community colleges.

"It's the name 'The' Board of Regents. Community colleges are apprehensive about that. We always felt that our needs might be lost," Frahm said. "We also think nine members are too little. Five members in each subcommittee would be better."

The only way to change the number of people on the Board of Regents would be through Senate Concurrent Resolution 1613 bill, which would not address a specific number of members in the constitution. A two-thirds vote of the House and Senate and votes from Kansas citizens would be needed to change the number of regents. Frahm also said it might take a year for this bill to be addressed.

"There is considerable growing interest in this, and there is naturally some reservation," Frahm said.

Although Rahman said she supports the bill, she said representation from faculty and students at regents institutions is missing.

"These people can be a good source of information, because they are not dealing with day-to-day issues," Rahman said.

Bill Docking, regents chairman, said the board would like to get input from a lot of different sources.

"As an advisory capacity, having a student and a teacher would be helpful," Docking said.

If the bill is approved, there will be opportunities for mergers and affiliations, coordination of off-campus education and an effective higher-education budget, Docking said. But he said there were some reservations.

"I'm not a fan of the three derivative boards. Each one would have its own

Prieto, Bainter found innocent of violations

By MOLLY MERSMANN
AND KELLE MILLER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Leo Prieto and Chris Bainter are still in the running for Student Body President and Vice President.

The running mates were found innocent of campaign contribution violations Thursday night in a hearing by a judicial ad hoc committee approved by John Danos, interim assistant dean of student life.

"No doubt that this was the right way to go," Prieto said. "We weren't guilty."

The violation involved possible campaign contributions by an individual who was listed as a student but when verified through university officials was found not to be a student, Elections Chair Joe Ashley said.

According to the campaign rules, contributions can only be made by students, faculty or relatives of the candidates.

PRIETO

"In auditing their expenditures report, one of the things we have to do is go through their contribution list," Paul English, elections committee hearing chair, said. "We kept seeing double names, and we looked them up to make sure they were students."

Prieto said the name on the list was a clerical error and that no contributions were made to his campaign by a non-student. He said the mistake occurred when the names were entered in a computer.

"Two people had the same last name," he said. "It was our contact, not our contributor. It's one of those things, a clerical error that kind of blew up. We're just trying to make a difference and run an effective campaign. I think it's just an honest mistake."

"There's so many rules," he said. "But I think we've done a pretty good job so far. We've had people helping us out who are so detailed, and it almost seems like we're being penalized for being organized."

Senate amends ARH resolution

By CAIT PURINTON
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

After a miscommunication between Student Body President Tracey Mann and the Association of Residence Halls last week, amendments were made to a resolution suggesting changes in the meal plan at the residence halls at Student Senate Thursday evening.

The resolution now reads Student Governing Association "suggests" ARH change the current meal plan, rather than "request" they make changes.

Mann said he should have checked with ARH President Nick Lander before introducing the legislation. Mann said they did have a meeting and are on the same page now. The resolution suggests ARH serve meals Sunday evening and no longer serve meals on Saturday evening.

"Hopefully, the end result will be what everybody wants," Mann said.

In other business, the Honor Council is still working on finalizing the Undergraduate Honor System Constitution.

Council member Matt Killingsworth said they are working on implementation of the honor code and on the budget.

The Honor Council, made up of K-State faculty members and members of the student body, would eventually eliminate the proctor system in group testing environments. Under the honor code, students or faculty can turn in other students for academic dishonesty to the Council.

"The difference between the old process of honesty and the new process of honesty is the faculty and the students are involved in the judiciary," said Faculty Senator and Honor Council Director Phil Anderson.

If someone is turned in, the person will go through a trial before the Council. Any breach in the code could result in a range of punitive options, from expulsion from the university to receiving a failing grade on a test.

Killingsworth said the standard punishment for individuals found guilty would be a permanent "XF" on their transcript. The "X" shows academic dishonesty and the "F" is the course grade. Students can appeal the grade, but it is a lengthy process.

NATO to accept 3 countries at Truman Library ceremony

By JEFFREY ULBRICH
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BRUSSELS, Belgium — The future of NATO is now. In the 10 years since the fall of the Berlin wall, enemies have become allies; hostility has become friendship; mistrust has become partnership. The process culminates today with the presentation of NATO membership documents to Poland, Hungary and the Czech Republic at the Harry S. Truman Library in Independence, Mo.

After that formality — to be carried out not far from where Prime Minister Winston Churchill made his famous "Iron Curtain" speech — the three former Warsaw Pact members will be NATO allies.

That means, among other things, the alliance will be obliged to defend these once-communist foes from external threat. It also means democracy, a free-market economy and European stability have moved a little farther east — something that is good for Europe, as well as the United States and Canada.

"The accession of the Czech Republic, Hungary and Poland ... is perhaps the clearest demonstration of the fact that Europe is growing closer together," Secretary-General Javier Solana said. "Extending membership to these three democracies helps to stabilize a region that historically has been the staging ground for many of the disasters of this century."

The Russians, however, are not happy, considering NATO expansion a direct threat to Russia's borders and security.

"It sounds very elegant, the idea of spreading democracy in Eastern Europe," said Vladimir Volkov, head of the Institute for Slavic

Snyder honored with Bobby Dodd Coach of the Year award

By RICHARD SMITH
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Bill Snyder soon will need some new shelves. Snyder, the Wildcats' football coach, picked up his fourth Coach of the Year trophy for the season when he was honored as the 1998 Bobby Dodd Coach of the Year during a luncheon Thursday in the K-State Student Union Ballroom.

Snyder previously had won the Paul "Bear" Bryant, Walter Camp and Associated Press Coach of the Year awards as well.

He received a trophy featuring the likeness of former Georgia Tech coach Bobby Dodd bearing the inscription, "In recognition of a higher and more noble aspect of college coaching ... a belief that the game of football should be kept in perspective with college life in general."

The award is given annually to the college football coach whose team achieves the greatest balance of success on and off the gridiron.

"I truly am honored and excited about accepting this award," Snyder said.

He said the award was even more significant to him because of an encounter he had with its namesake, one of only two College Football Hall of Fame members to be inducted as both a player and a coach.

"I had the grand fortune of meeting Bobby Dodd," Snyder said. "I had the opportunity to spend a little bit of time with him and was tremendously impressed."

"I was particularly impressed and influenced by his care and concern for those around him."

In addition to compiling a 165-64-8 record and recording 13 bowl appearances at Tech from 1945 to 1966, Dodd was known for insisting that his players succeed in the classroom and

Driver hits Parking Services worker after wheel lock

A Parking Services employee was hit by a vehicle driven by a person attempting to avoid a wheel lock Tuesday.

Neither K-State Police nor Parking Services would release the name of the employee or the name of the person driving the vehicle, but both said the employee suffered no serious injuries.

K-State Police Lt. Richard Herrman said the name of the driver could not be released, because of possible pending legal action.

"The case has gone to the city attorney," Herrman said. "He'll decide if there will be any formal charges."

The incident was reported to K-State Police as battery Wednesday, but Herrman said he didn't know how likely it was that charges would be pressed. City prosecutor Christopher Getty was unavailable for comment.

Sources at Parking Services said the victim was attempting to give the vehicle a wheel lock when the owner of the vehicle arrived. To avoid the wheel lock, the subject attempted to drive away, but a Parking Services van was parked in the way.

The driver was unable to avoid the van and ran into its open door before bumping into the employee.

The incident was not reported immediately because the police officer overseeing the wheel lock did not tell the Parking Services employees that filing a report was an option.

Men escape after pranking Alpha Chi Omega bathroom

Three young males wearing khaki clothing broke into the Alpha Chi Omega sorority house Wednesday, spread toilet paper and soap around a bathroom, then escaped before police arrived.

Both the Riley County Police Department and K-State Police were called to the Alpha Chi house at about 3 a.m., after a member of the sorority discovered the three men in the bathroom.

"One of the girls just happened to see them," said Sara Urbauer, Alpha Chi member and sophomore in business. "She screamed, and they ran downstairs."

According to the RCPD report, the three were last seen fleeing out the back door.

RCPD Lt. Herb Crosby said he didn't think the three intended any real harm.

"It looks like it might have been some kind of practical joke," Crosby said.

Urbauer said she agreed that it was probably just a joke.

"Basically, they were just messing it up so they could say, 'ha ha, we got in,'" Urbauer said. "We wrote it off as a prank."

Crosby said incidents like this are not rare at sororities.

"There's quite a few of them," he said. "They tend to increase this time of year."

Trash talking escalates to attack at Rec Complex

A K-State student was attacked in the parking lot of Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex following an intramural basketball game Wednesday night.

Carmen Littlejohn, junior in kinesiology, said several members of an opposing team, the Lady Ballers, waited outside of the Rec Complex for her and her friends and attacked her when she came out.

"They waited outside for us for a long time," Littlejohn said. "They were outside of the gym, but still inside the Rec."

"Finally, they left the Rec, so we left, too, but they were still waiting outside. They pulled up in their car, and got out. I got thrown down and kicked around."

Littlejohn said that after the assailants left, the police arrived and questioned her. She said she chose not to file any charges because she wanted to put the incident behind her.

"I think if I file charges, it's going to cause lots of problems," she said. "If I don't, I think things will die down."

Littlejohn said not all of the opposing players took part, and some of the players on the opposing team apologized to her for what happened.

K-State Police Lt. Richard Herrman said the scuffle originated due to trash-talking on the court.

"It appears that words were exchanged both during and after the game," Herrman said.

"The Rec officials told us this was a pretty mouthy team," Littlejohn said.

Herrman said Littlejohn could still file charges if she chooses to, but he said she was not likely to.

Shuttle service to be offered for Landon Lecture

Shuttle service will be available for those who attend the Landon Lecture on Monday when Sen. John McCain delivers the 114th lecture in the series.

Charles Reagan, chairman of the lecture series, said the shuttle service will alleviate parking congestion on campus. He said the service is needed because of lack of campus parking and construction on Anderson Avenue, which eliminated about 70 parking spots in the lot south of the K-State Student Union.

He said some people had difficulties finding a parking space for the Landon Lecture on Tuesday, which featured former Sen. Howard Baker.

"Our patrons found it difficult to park earlier this week, so we hope this is the answer," Reagan said.

A shuttle bus will be in front of the press box in the west KSU Stadium parking lot from 9 to 10:20 a.m. Passengers will be dropped off at the Union from 9 to 10 a.m. and in front of McCain Auditorium from 10 to 10:20 a.m.

The shuttle also will be available following the lecture. It will pick up passengers at McCain and bring them to the West Stadium parking lot from 11:30 a.m. to noon.

Thousands feed at dining centers

Housing and Dining Services uses K-State products to feed students.

By JINA HIPPE
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Producing the thousands of pounds of food required nightly to feed the hungry inhabitants of the residence halls can be a tall order for K-State Department of Housing and Dining Services employees.

Housing and Dining Services spends about $2 million each year to feed the 3,500 residents.

Karen Winslow, procurement officer for K-State Housing and Dining Services, said she buys food daily throughout the semester.

"We purchase food from different distributors," Winslow said. "We buy products from Kansas City, Wichita, Topeka, Emporia and Oklahoma City."

Housing and Dining Services buys all of its milk and hamburger from the K-State Department of Animal Sciences and Industry.

"We look at it as a partnering, and we get exceptionally good service," Winslow said. "We are assured of the quality."

Nonperishable food products are shipped to Pittman Building, where they are stored. These products then are distributed to the three dining centers as they are needed. Perishable items are sent directly to the dining centers.

Students living in the residence halls have the option of choosing a 10-, 15- or 20-meal plan.

"Students choose the number of meals that they think best fits their lifestyle," said Mary Molt, assistant director of Housing and Dining Services and assistant professor of hotel, restaurant and institution management and dietetics.

Meals are served seven days a week, with breakfast, lunch and dinner served every day except Sunday. On Sunday, only breakfast and lunch are served.

Molt said about one-third of students miss meals on their meal plan.

"Students that buy a 10-meal plan miss a lot fewer meals than students who buy a 20-meal plan," she said.

Mark Edwards, unit director for Derby Dining Complex, said about 2,000 students eat at Derby, but the number of students eating at the dining center decreases on the weekends.

"The pattern that we see in this complex is that early in the week is the busiest," he said. "Our highest counts occur Monday and Tuesday nights at dinner time."

Edwards said K-State dining centers are original in that they make food from scratch. He said Derby serves more than 3,000 meals everyday, but not every one of those meals is consumed at Derby.

"Takeout accounts for a large part of our total," Edwards said. "I would say on any given day we are serving about 2,300 meals in-house."

He said the most popular menu item served at Derby is chicken tenders. Among the three dining centers, 1,000 pounds of chicken tenders are used per meal session. French fries and deli turkey are other popular menu items. Housing and Dining Services uses 7,150 pounds of French fries per month and 2,400 pounds of deli turkey per month.

Molt said a decision must be made about what to do with leftovers.

"We try to keep the leftover quantity as low as possible, but you can't always not have any leftover," Molt said. "We decide if the food can be warmed up, whether we can give it to the Breadbasket or if it must be thrown out."

Molt said the goal of Housing and Dining Services is to help students be successful in their academic pursuits in a nutritional way.

"Our objective is to have lots of variety and make sure students are always getting a balanced meal," Molt said. "We also hope to provide nutritional education to help students make informed decisions in their eating habits."

St. Patrick's Day events include parade, road races

By JOEY ECK
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

More than just Irish eyes will be smiling at the 21st annual St. Patrick's Day celebration this Saturday in Aggieville.

Cheryl Sieben, executive director of Aggieville Business Association, said both new and old events are planned for the festivities.

The celebration will kick off at 11 a.m. with a parade through Aggieville.

Featured in the parade will be Street Beat, a marching percussion ensemble, as well as the McLoughlin Irish Dancers. The Manhattan Jaycees, city commission and school board candidates, local car clubs and a Harley-Davidson motorcycle group also are expected to take part in the parade.

The Fun Run and the 10K Road Race, the oldest events in the St. Patrick's Day celebration, already have had a record number of entrants, said Becky Ballard, co-owner of Ballard's Sporting Goods, which is sponsoring the races. She said those interested still can register up to two hours before the start.

"We usually have about 800 participants total, and normally around 200-300 of those register the day of the race," Ballard said.

The two-mile Fun Run will start at 12:30 p.m., followed by the 10K Road Race and Leprechaun Walk at 1:15.

Registration fees for runners are $15; walkers' fees are $11. Fourteen age divisions and a wheelchair division are included in the Fun Run and 10K races. Trophies and medals will be given to the top three finishers in each division of the two races.

The Leprechaun Walk is open to all ages, and all participants who finish this event will receive ribbons.

The awards ceremony and a barbecue will begin at 2:45 p.m. in Triangle Park.

Ballard said the St. Patrick's Day celebration is usually during spring break, but was changed this year to try to get more university students involved.

"We really encourage the college kids to get out and run with us," she said.

Another event for the day is the "Best Decorated Kid on Wheels" contest. Sieben said the Aggieville Business Association will be giving a prize for the best-decorated child on a decorated bike, wagon, wheelchair, or anything on wheels.

Sieben said she also wanted the college students to know that a prize will go to the "Most Unique University Group." The rules for this contest are very broad, Sieben said. As long as the theme goes with St. Patrick's Day, whatever they come up with works, she said.

"One year we had a fraternity win that showed up in a convertible and they were all done up in green," Sieben said.

New events this year include the "Greenest Person," open to all ages, sponsored by KQLA, Q-103.5. In this contest, the person with the most significantly different and greenest ensemble that is presented to the disc jockeys in front of Varney's Bookstore will win a cash prize.

Sieben said she thinks college students also would enjoy this contest.

"They're just crazy enough to want to do that," she said.

Another new event is a coloring contest sponsored by The Palace and Sunny 102.5 FM. Coloring sheets are available at The Palace and still will be available the day of the festivities. Prizes will be given to the winners of this contest as well.

Sieben said food vendors will be set up throughout Aggieville, and many businesses will be running specials.

"There will be lots of food and lots of fun. We usually get thousands of people down here every year," Sieben said. "It's kind of like a rite of spring. We're all Irish on St. Patrick's Day in Aggieville."

Communication key to Senate's success

The Kansas State University Association of Residence Halls brought home an important point on the floor of Student Senate on Thursday night: Senators actually should communicate to the students they say they need to increase communication with.

KSUARH had an excellent example, too. In a previous meeting, Senate had passed a resolution recommending a change in the meal plans of residence halls. However, no members of the KSUARH board had been contacted even to discuss such an idea.

Senators would argue that resolutions, which are designed more to influence than enforce, are the perfect way to start a dialogue about a topic. To members of the KSUARH executive board, it undoubtedly looked like Senate was trying to coerce a smaller governmental body into doing something.

No one should blame senator for trying to solve problems students are having, but there is a method that must be followed when trying to address the situation.

Senate is not the only group on campus designed to represent students, and it should not try to govern where there are governmental bodies already in place. Entering a dialogue is one thing, but formally passing resolutions is quite another.

Larger governmental bodies should try to shy away from lobbying smaller governmental bodies. It undermines the power of the people who try to represent a niche of campus. The entire reason KSUARH exists is because the residence halls need an organization to represent their specific interests.

The purpose of Student Senate, on the other hand, is to represent the student body as a whole. Resolutions that ask for change should reflect the entire university.

Obsessed with FASHION

School uniforms would curb violence in schools, humble students

VIEWPOINT

GUTHRIE

Little Bobby shoots little Joey because he wants little Joey's super-duper, high tech, air-pumpin', flame-throwin', world-shakin' athletic shoes.

Teenage Ashley stabs teenage Kelly for wearing a cleavage-showing, booty-shakin', hoochie mama shirt that made teenage Ashley's boyfriend stare.

Stop the insanity, as Susan Powder would say. The situation has gotten out of control and needs to be contained.

As a result, the solution of school uniforms arises. I'm all for school uniforms. So my real reasons aren't always very good — namely, I'm too lazy to pick out something to wear in the morning — but I have some other valid reasons.

In fact, I believe there should be a nationwide uniform. No more scandals like the Nancy Reagan dress or deal, and no more of Hillary Clinton's hats or Roseanne's boas. Life would be good.

The down side to the uniform debate is that there will be no more derision of your physics teacher's antiquated ties and no more shows like "Veronica's Closet." Oh, wait, that's not negative. Would it be too optimistic to hope for quality programming on television?

Speaking of television, would as many people mindlessly watch it if fashion was no longer a factor? No more televised catwalks, no more Calvin Klein commercials that resemble child pornography, and the Oscars probably would not be televised anymore. Sorry, men, no more televised Sports Illustrated swimsuit-less Swimsuit Issue. Before you totally discredit my argument on that basis, listen on.

Just think how the population of mall-goers would decline drastically. In fact, there would be no reason to continue to have malls. That means no more following your girlfriend around for a whole day telling her that an outfit looks nice on her and doesn't make her look fat. No more standing in line for hours for a dressing room at Abercrombie and Fitch just to find that only a size-zero person could look good in the outfit.

On top of all of that, do you know what mall elimination would do for academics? Think of all of the teenyboppers who would stay home and be so bored that they might actually do homework. Sorry, idealism got the better of me.

Is there any down side to a national uniform? If done correctly, school uniforms can work in conjunction with rules and regulations to promote discipline. Let's create a little humility and humbleness among students today, because they're all becoming little punks.

The best solution appears to be a nationwide nudist colony, but somehow I don't think state and federal legislators will go for that.

So here's the plan, Stan: we're going back to the '60s and cladding everyone in polyester, curtain-looking shirts and bell bottoms. In order not to defeat the definition of uniform, I will pick out an exceptionally tacky pattern for the shirt personally.

I'm convinced that there was something in the attire of that era that united everyone — I think people looked at each other and laughed. You can't shoot someone when you're buckled over laughing. Maybe the excessive use of marijuana played the dominant role, and we might be forced to serve pot brownies everyday for lunch, but there is potential in this idea.

If you're not so keen on '60s clothing, might I suggest a nice pair of gray Hanes sweatpants and a gray sweatshirt? Comfortable, gray can be dressy or casual, and breathable. Why not?

I strongly urge you to write your state senators and representatives in support of this movement and suggest this as an alternative to dealing with all the school violence laws. Who knows; some of them are just crazy enough to pass it.

Friends' advice doesn't soothe loneliness

VIEWPOINT

LEVIN

Does one need to find contentment and joy from within oneself and not try to derive it from others?

Ever since I've started purging my emotional grief to the university community, I have been receiving an abundance of comments about my columns, either via e-mail or directly after being recognized in public. Most of it has been to offer support in my own little time of difficulty or praise for writing on such a personal topic that we all go through but is not often presented in a public forum. Many of these comments are from individuals who have gone through the same loss and tell me what we all know to be true: that this, too, shall pass and life will return to a condition of being well, or at least normal. I'm truly appreciative of all these comments and letters, and I'm glad that some of the Collegian readers are finding the weekly documentation of my emotional state a somewhat worthwhile endeavor.

Along with these comments, I also have been receiving much advice (of which I, too, am appreciative). Among all the comments and advice, there is one recurring theme: I'm told that I'm deriving my emotional wholeness from others. I'm advised that I need to find comfort and contentment from within myself; that I need to learn how to enjoy being alone.

Intuitively, this sounds like good and reasonable advice and is something to which I have given much thought. It makes sense that one must be a whole person by oneself before one can go out and have mature and healthy relationships with others. How can one build a relationship if the foundation from within is incomplete?

Also, one can't depend on others always being there from which to derive wholeness. All relationships eventually must come to an end. If people do not find contentment from within and only can derive it from others, they are just setting themselves up for continuous disappointment and despair. Besides, it is a lot for individuals to ask others to be their source of emotional completeness.

Once one becomes emotionally whole by oneself, then one can be alone without being crippled by loneliness.

I do understand what these people are telling me, but I'm not convinced this is true. First of all, I have been taking this advice with a grain of salt, for most of it has come from individuals who either are in stable couple relationships or have close friends and family who live nearby to whom they can retreat in time of need, although this does not necessarily negate the wisdom of the advice. These people have the luxury to be alone or not. As for myself, there is no adult I feel very close to in the whole state of Kansas. Most all of my family and close friends live back on the East Coast. After the dissolution of my relationships, I had no choice but to be alone.

Moreover, human beings are social creatures. We have evolved an innate drive to form long-lasting mating pairs, and from these mating pairs form families, which in turn form communities and societies. This is how we survive as a species. As John Donne wrote, "No man is an island unto himself." We need other people. We need to feel connected. Several weeks ago, I wrote about how giving gives life meaning. If one does not have anyone to whom to give, then one is going to have a difficult time finding meaning in one's life.

Last week's cover story in U.S. News and World Report was on depression. It turns out that depression is worse now than ever. It is considered by the World Health Organization to be the fourth-most disabling disease in the world and is on pace to be second (after heart disease) by the year 2020. Depression not only is affecting more people, but younger people, too. The greater awareness of depression cannot alone account for this considerable increase. Among the factors that are perpetuating this epidemic, as listed by Myrna Weissman, a Columbia University epidemiologist, is that people are involved in fewer family and community ties.

I received a phone call last Monday from one of my close friends who lives in Pennsylvania. He referred me to an article he saw in the Sunday newspaper magazine USA Weekend titled "Resilience" by Monika Guttman. It appears that learning the skills that enable one to bounce back from life's significant setbacks is going to be the newest trend in popular health as we enter the 21st century. In her article, Guttman writes that many studies have shown that one of the most important factors allowing one to be resilient is to "be and feel connected to others."

Except for your own true religion, loneliness is one of the reasons that every other culture in the world invented their particular gods. A lot of the invention of deities has to do with explaining why we exist and the nature of existence. A lot of it has to do with personifying the moral conduct one must follow for there to be a harmony within that particular society. But some of it has to do with the human need to be closely present with others. If a tribesman is alone in the woods, how could this person feel lonely knowing that the tree spirits are all-surrounding?

Christians are always talking about how Jesus is always by their side and singing the song "What a Friend We Have in Jesus." What better constant companion can one have than Jesus? A man who always will love you, a man who is love. How could a Christian ever feel lonely being in a relationship that never ends, even after death? Jesus isn't by the side of the Christian for his benefit, but for the benefit of the Christian because of the fact that people need to be close to others. Jesus is not the constant close companion of the sponge. The sponge doesn't need friends. It's perfectly fine by itself. Humans aren't.

During the late 1960s, it often was proclaimed that God was dead. Forty years later, it turns out that the United States is, by far, the most religious of all First World nations. It's interesting to note that of all First World nations, the United States is also the loneliest and has the least sense of community.

As for the eventual despair that occurs at the inevitable termination of a relationship, I am going to go into my relationships fully and will accept and deal with the pain at the end. C.S. Lewis said that pain we feel at the end of a relationship is part of the love. And a man named Levine pointed out, "Love is the only rational act."

READERS write

New Wal-Mart would hurt Manhattan small businesses

Editor,

In response to R.A. Hartman's interesting attempt to process many of the issues surrounding the building of a Wal-Mart Supercenter on the west end of Manhattan, I feel compelled to point out how his conclusions fall short of a well-informed, intellectually respectable opinion.

The application of pseudo-Darwinian economic theory does not hold water in this case. The documented fact that Wal-Mart tends to drive small businesses out of business is not due to the small business' inability to prepare for such large-scale competition. It is due to the fact that Wal-Mart is not community oriented and is designed to funnel its profits out of the community and into the pockets of its owners. Wal-Mart is as guilty of regional market dumping as any country has been for global market dumping.

Small businesses, in fact, bring more choice to the community by not homogenizing choices in where, when and how a community shops. Why do you think Sam Walton died the richest man in America? Why do you think his children continue to compose the majority of the top-20 richest people in America? Take, for example, the fact that many studies on sustainable economic growth have shown how five "mom-and-pop" stores, while offering more choices at slightly higher per unit costs than one Wal-Mart, actually circulate more money within the local economy than the Wal-Mart. Sure, you may have to pay 50 cents more on that case of diet soda at a mom-and-pop store, but that fifty cents will cycle through the local economy three to five times as long as the money you spent at Wal-Mart. In the long run, shopping at the mom-and-pop store buys you more.

Hartman concludes that Manhattan must "contemplate the forces at work in the economy and work to guide Manhattan calmly into the harbors of a capitalistic and consumer oriented community." That's exactly what I, and many others have done, and the conclusions of this contemplation are what make us mad as hell. Who says we must be another strip-mall community off Interstate 70? Free choice means we, as a community, can reject the supercenter and instead support and plan for economic growth that will continue over several generations. Who says we shouldn't encourage our children to own and run small businesses over just being mindless consumers working as check-out clerks? Small business owners will buy houses and cars and pay property taxes right here in Manhattan. How many of the employees at the supercenter will be able to do that, Hartman?

Planning for the future does not involve merely resigning to the fact that our city must grow and grow — it involves planning for it to grow in a sustainable way. Sustainability is not what Wal-Mart represents; it represents the continued support of its wealthy owners and the funneling of money from our community into their bank accounts.

Women's basketball team deserves more coverage

Editor,

I have a quick question. Why is it that the only team that you list as deserving praise is the men's basketball team? What about the women's team? They had an amazing season of winning games they were not supposed to and are continuing their season into the WNIT.

Why is the women's team treated like a second-class team? Many times it is almost impossible to find information about a game that they won while the men lose their game and they get all of the headlines.

I believe that if the Collegian is going to move into the next century properly then it needs to understand that both genders are involved in athletics at the varsity level. Please make some of these changes so that I can be proud as an alumnus to show the Collegian to future students who happen to be female athletes.

House debates sending troops to Kosovo

By TOM RAUM
ASSOCIATED PRESS WRITER

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Defying the Clinton administration, the House plunged into a contentious debate Thursday on whether U.S. troops should be sent to Kosovo. Democrats called the timing reckless, with highly fragile peace talks resuming in Paris on Monday.

The Republican majority put aside Democratic appeals for a delay.

"Congress must have a meaningful role in this decision," Speaker Dennis Hastert, R-Ill., told the House as it debated a nonbinding resolution. A vote was expected late in the evening.

President Clinton has proposed sending up to 4,000 Americans to Kosovo as part of a 28,000-member NATO peace-keeping force if an agreement is reached to end the strife in the province.

At this stage, however, neither the Albanian nor the Serbian side has agreed to sign such an agreement. Officials said they feared that congressional involvement now could torpedo the already troubled process.

"This is the height of irresponsibility,"

House Minority Leader Dick Gephardt, D-Mo., said. "We all know that we're in a very delicate moment in the Kosovo peace negotiations."

Democrats failed to postpone the measure on two largely party-line procedural votes — 218-199 and 218-201. Republicans have a thin five-vote majority in the 435-member chamber.

Even though the resolution is non-binding, and even though the House seemed likely to support the president in the end, the debate itself showcased deep divisions among lawmakers.

Many are fearful the deployment could lead to another open-ended engagement in the former Yugoslavia, like Bosnia. Even though Clinton said in late 1995 that U.S. troops would be in Bosnia for one year, about 6,900 U.S. troops remain today as a part of the 32,000-strong peace-keeping force.

House Majority Leader Dick Armey, R-Texas, called the proposed troop deployment "poorly considered and unlikely to achieve our desired ends."

"Our military is being stretched so thin, we are putting them at grave risk," Rep. Dana Rohrabacher, R-Calif., said.

"There is no peace plan."

The resolution, if approved, would support a deployment of troops.

Scores of amendments awaited action — including demands for a timetable, cost limitations and various other restrictions.

"People in my district want to know the exit strategy," said Rep. Porter Goss, R-Fla., chairman of the House Intelligence Committee. "Getting answers from the administration is part of our job."

The administration said it does not need congressional approval to send troops to Kosovo as part of a peace-keeping mission and not for combat — a point most legislative leaders concede.

Hastert said Congress had an obligation to give an opinion whenever U.S. troops might be sent into combat overseas.

The House speaker said both the British Parliament and the German Bundestag had debated the issue. "I don't believe any harm has been done to the peace process," he said. "We have set in place a fair and open process."

"Kosovo is a great human tragedy fanned by injustice and unexplained hatred," Hastert said. He said he had personal reservations about sending troops to Kosovo — and didn't know how he'd vote until the debate ended.

The Senate also is taking up the measure, possibly as early as next week. The debate occurred against a darkening backdrop for reaching a peace accord as new fighting erupted in Kosovo.

U.S. envoy Richard Holbrooke headed back to Washington, D.C., from Belgrade after failing to persuade Yugoslav President Slobodan Milosevic to accept foreign troops in Kosovo. While Milosevic was unwilling to agree, Kosovo's ethnic Albanians didn't appear eager to sign the accord, either.

House International Relations Committee Chairman Benjamin A. Gilman, R-N.Y., defended the decision to take it up now.

He said NATO was poised to send in the peace keepers once a peace accord had been signed and before the ink had dried. Waiting to debate the issue until then, "we'd risk undercutting our troops in the field," Gilman said.

Wildcats face No. 9 Texas

By JON BALMER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Unable to fit a Wednesday game against Doane College of Lincoln, Neb., into the schedule because of Kansas' ever-changing weather, the K-State baseball team departs for warmer pastures today for a three-game series against No. 9 Texas, the top team in the Big 12 Conference with a perfect 6-0 mark.

The Cats, 8-9 on the season, are looking for their first conference victory and first win in the state of Texas this year after being swept by 18th-ranked Baylor two weeks ago in Waco.

Disappointed by Wednesday's cancellation and the chance to get in more games before the Big 12 series, head coach Mike Clark brings in a team coming off a 2-1 weekend at the Jacksonville Greyhound Racing Baseball Classic.

Individually, the biggest performance was turned in by sophomore Kasey Weishaar, who continued his stellar season by going seven for 13, notching four runs and stringing his hitting streak to 10 games.

Now batting a solid .447 on the year, Clark said the key to Weishaar's improvement was his more disciplined approach at the plate.

"He's hitting the breaking pitch, he's hitting the off-speed pitch, and that's the difference between good hitters and guys that are on streaks like Kasey is on right now," Clark said. "He's very tough to pitch to, because he's not striking out much and he's being very patient at the plate."

"He's showing some pop the other way. You have to play him straight up, because he's just as liable to line a double down the right-field line as he is to pull one in the gap in left center."

On the other side of the outfield, senior Quinn Cravens showed signs of breaking out of an early-season slump with a 4-7 performance in the Cats' first two games this past weekend. Bagging his first home run of the season against Xavier, Clark said the left fielder's slow start has paralleled his early season struggles a year ago.

"He struggled early last season, and then it was about this time he caught fire — he started to swing the bat a lot better and strike out less," Clark said. "You can't count on anything, but Quinn works extremely hard and made good adjustments the first two games this weekend. Hopefully, he'll continue to build on that."

Cravens' success might be vital to earning some wins in Austin this weekend. The Longhorns, 16-6 on the season, have earned impressive wins early on, gaining a three-game sweep against defending champion Southern California and splitting two vs. perennial power Louisiana State.

Averaging an impressive 9.2 runs per game, the biggest contributor to the offense has been first baseman/catcher Jeff Ontiveros, who has exploded as a freshman to lead UT with a .397 batting average and six home runs.

"He's a very mature freshman and has played very consistently," Texas head coach Augie Garrido said. "He's added a lot offensively and defensively, and has been able to sustain rallies and play his role."

While the Longhorns have been the surprise of the conference so far, K-State has found success in head-to-head matchups since the Big 12's inception. With a 4-2 edge against UT, including a 2-1 record in last season's Manhattan meeting, Garrido said keeping the Cats from their first conference victory won't be easy.

"They're a fine hitting team and focused on the fundamentals of the game," he said. "They're going to come ready to play."

Tennis team to face OU, OSU

By SETH TROTTER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State tennis team will try to build on its 1-0 conference record this weekend with two games in Oklahoma.

The Wildcats take on Oklahoma on Saturday in Norman, and they face Oklahoma State on Sunday in Stillwater.

The Cats opened Big 12 Conference play last weekend with a convincing 8-1 win at Iowa State.

K-State will enter the weekend short-handed. Sophomore Martina Pospisilova is out with the flu, and sophomore Eva Novotna is questionable because of flu-like symptoms.

Pospisilova has played the last two weeks at No. 2 singles and is a part of the No. 1 doubles team with freshman Kathy Chuda.

Head coach Steve Bietau said he would have to shuffle the line-ups.

"We tried a couple things in practice with the doubles pairing," he said. "We like to keep teams together when we can."

Bietau said he would likely move freshman Alena Jecminkova and sophomore Anna Pampoulova up to No. 1 doubles. The rest depends a lot on whether Novotna can play. If she can't, the team will have only five players and will have to forfeit a singles match and a doubles match.

Last year, Oklahoma beat K-State in Manhattan 5-4.

With most of the players from Oklahoma still intact, Bietau said he knows the Sooners have a good team this year.

"Their top-two players, Viviana Mraanova and Raluca Gheorghe, are very strong players," Bietau said. "They have good depth. Essentially, they have the same team as last year."

Last season, the Wildcats beat Oklahoma State twice, 7-2 in Manhattan and 5-1 at the Big 12 Tournament.

Although K-State is familiar with its opponents this weekend, Bietau said he does not think it will provide an advantage.

"I don't think that is a determining factor," he said.

In every dual match, Bietau said he wants the team to compete well. Even though the Cats enter the weekend minus at least one player, Bietau's expectations have not changed.

Cats advance in NIT with 71-60 victory

By NICK BRATKOVIC
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

For the first time in more than 16 years, the K-State women's basketball team has won a post-season basketball game.

The Cats defeated Creighton 71-60 Thursday to advance to the second round of the Women's National Invitation Tournament.

"Tonight's game wasn't always pretty, but we found a way to get it done," Patterson said.

With 5:37 left in the game, K-State went on a 11-3 run behind the inside play of forward Olga Firsova and the outside shooting of guard Kristin Rethman.

The run began at an unlikely time when point guard Essence Perry fouled out of the game; she finished with five assists. Perry's replacement was Kim Woodlee.

"It's tough to make the adjustment at first," Woodlee said. "I played point guard last year, and tonight it really wasn't that bad once I got back into it."

The run led the Cats to an eight-point lead, and Creighton began to shoot three-pointers in desperation, but it wasn't enough. K-State would go on to the victory, advancing to play Arkansas State on Sunday in the second round of the Tournament.

K-State opened the game looking to work the ball inside. Early in the first half the Cats were able to get good looks at the basket, but were shooting just 37 percent from the field.

Forward Nicky Ramage stepped up, scoring seven straight points to finish the half with 13.

Creighton answered Ramage's play with the three-point shooting of Mel Sames.

Sames hit three straight three-pointers in the first half and finished the half shooting four of five from three-point range.

Patterson said at times in the first half K-State was slow getting to the ball.

"We haven't had that problem consistently this season," Patterson said. "Lately, teams have been testing us and we have been a step slow."

The Cats led throughout the first half, before a Krissie Spanheimer three-pointer gave Creighton the 34-32 lead with 3:42 remaining. The Bluejays would enter halftime leading 36-35.

Firsova's 20 points help Cats advance to play Arkansas Sunday

By FRANK FLATON
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

In the K-State women's basketball team's first-round victory against Colorado in the Big 12 tournament, Olga Firsova stepped up in the closing minutes to score 15 points and six rebounds in the game after both Angie Finkes and Nicky Ramage had fouled out.

Well, in the Wildcats first-round WNIT victory over the Creighton Bluejays, Firsova did it again.

The six-foot-six-inch junior center pounded the Bluejays inside with 20 points and ten rebounds to throttle the Wildcats into the second round of the WNIT with a 71-60 victory.

"She was effective inside," K-State head coach Deb Patterson said. "She turned strong tonight and wasn't afraid to make shots with two or three players on her. I think that is the next step for her."

Firsova connected for nine of 16 shots in only 27 minutes of play to add to her 10.4 points per game on the season. Firsova's night included two straight baskets to open the second half for the Cats.

Patterson said the K-State post players were able to do so well because the guard play began opening up the inside play.

"I think the more aggressive the guards are the more that the passing lanes start to open up," she said. "We don't have many nights where Olga has 16 touches. They were giving them options to be players."

Freshman guard Kristin Rethman came together with Firsova for a convenient inside-outside combination as Rethman totaled 16 points, including four for four from the three-point line.

"When the three-point shooters started making shots, that opened the game up for our post players," Patterson said.

Rethman said she was ready to step up from the three-point arch with help from point guard Essence Perry.

"Essence found me at good times, and I was ready to shoot," Rethman said.

The next stop for Firsova and the Wildcats in the second round of the WNIT is Arkansas State in Arkansas on Sunday at a time to be announced.

"The next step for us is to win on the road against Arkansas State," she said. "We need to win that game."

Arkansas State defeated New Hampshire in the first round to earn the second-round match-up against the Cats.

In a tournament where the team that has the most attendance continues to play at home, K-State failed to clinch a home game for the second round, but Patterson was still proud of the showing for the Creighton game.

"I thought we had a great crowd tonight," she said. "They were a factor, and I was excited by their presence tonight."

Despite playing on the road, Patterson has high hopes for the Cats in the WNIT.

"We got an opportunity to do some amazing things in this tournament," Patterson said. "We have to take this show on the road to take on Arkansas State at home."

"WE GOT AN OPPORTUNITY TO DO SOME AMAZING THINGS IN THIS TOURNAMENT."

DEB PATTERSON, K-STATE WOMEN'S BASKETBALL COACH

Pete Rose deserves place in Baseball Hall of Fame despite being banned from sport for betting on games

VIEWPOINT

I admit, I'm sort of a sports zealot. There really isn't very much about sports I don't know. For example, I can name the all-time leading major league home-run hitter for each letter of the alphabet with which their last name begins (For the "T" category, the leader is a tie between the current Frank Thomas and the old-timer Frank Thomas. Weird, huh?). And who else would know the Stanley Cup can hold 17 cans of beer?

However, there happens to be one glaring omission from my vast well of sports knowledge, and that is why Pete Rose is not in the Hall of Fame.

A little historical background on the subject.

Pete Rose was banned from baseball forever a few years back for betting on baseball. One, banning Rose FOR LIFE was an awfully anal thing for the commissioner to do for merely betting on baseball. I mean, O.J. Simpson killed two people (yes, he did), but was his bust removed from the Football Hall of Fame? No, siree. You've got various athletes using drugs, but are they even punished? Not really. I can't count how many times Steve Howe has been kicked out of baseball for life for cocaine use but then reinstated later. But Pete, oh no, he committed that horrible sin of betting on baseball. For shame, Pete. Now your place in baseball history probably never will be properly acknowledged.

Two, Pete arguably was the greatest player — behind George Brett, of course — in major-league history. He won batting titles in 1968, '69 and '73. In 1985, he gathered career hit number 4,192 and passed Ty Cobb for the most hits. Saying Pete doesn't belong in the Hall of Fame is like saying the Pope doesn't belong in heaven. Oh, the humanity!

I need to calm down. I've already scared a couple of other columnists with my snarling, so I'll hand it over to Bob, the Collegian baseball analyst, while I go beat my head against the wall.

"I surveyed 31 people around campus," Bob said. "Twenty-nine people said Rose should definitely be in the Hall of Fame, one said no and the other said Rose can go do something unmentionable. We're going to have to call that an undecided. Perhaps I shouldn't have bothered him during a test. My personal opinion is they should put him in the Hall of Fame but maybe put one of those black censor boxes over every mention of his name. How's that for a compromise?"

You know, I think I've got it figured out. There has to be more to the story. Maybe there is a government conspiracy to keep Pete Rose out of Cooperstown. That's the only reasonable guess I really have. I'd like to know what Mulder and Scully know about what's going on.

We know from "The X-Files" that the Cigarette-Smoking Man is the reason the Buffalo Bills have not won a Super Bowl. Perhaps Pete is really an alien, and if he becomes ensnared, the secret will be out. (I think I saw this in the tabloids, actually.) Pete, if somehow you're reading this, trust no one!

More students sick with flu this winter

By SETH TROTTER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

It is that time of year when classes start to have fewer and fewer students, and it's not necessarily because students need a break.

The flu season has hit campus. From Dec. 10 to Feb. 11, Lafene Health Center had 141 student flu cases. During the same time last year, there were 133 cases.

The flu is a contagious respiratory disease caused by a virus that usually arrives in the winter.

Dr. Jay Reppert said he has seen many students with the flu this season.

"The flu usually hits in the winter months," Reppert said. "Last year, it started around Christmas. It comes during winter because we are all inside and closer together, which makes it easier for it to spread."

There are three types of flu viruses, labeled A, B and C. Type A is the most severe, and C is the least severe.

"Type A can be treated if it is found early on," Reppert said. "The problem is that most people don't realize they have the flu until it is too late, because the symptoms start out like a cold."

If discovered in the first or second day, the flu can be treated with antiviral medications.

"If you come in within the first couple of days, you can be treated with an antiviral medication, which will reduce your symptoms," Cathie Barry, director of nurses, said. "After those first few days, if you don't get treated with antiviral medication, all you can do is try to control the symptoms."

She said drinking plenty of fluids will keep the body from getting dehydrated. Getting sufficient rest is also important to control flu symptoms.

"So many students won't get the rest they need because they feel that they have to take a test," Barry said. "The flu lasts for several days, and they really need to get some sleep."

Other precautions can be taken to decrease the chances of catching the flu. Barry said she recommends avoiding contact with crowds and places where the virus might be carried and maintaining good health habits.

Lafene also offers a flu vaccine, which must be administered before flu season arrives.

"In late September, at Lafene, we offer a flu vaccine," Barry said. "It is a shot that you must take before the usual flu season. It is a highly effective way of preventing yourself from getting the flu. It is still possible to get the flu after taking the vaccine, but it won't be very severe at all."

"SO MANY STUDENTS WON'T GET THE REST THEY NEED BECAUSE THEY FEEL THAT THEY HAVE TO TAKE A TEST."

DIRECTOR OF NURSES

Rule limits guest visits to residence hall rooms

By KELLY EVENSON
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Many students at K-State live away from home and occasionally want to have friends, family or significant others visit. However, those living in the residence halls might have a more difficult time than other students.

Derek Jackson, Department of Housing and Dining Services assistant director, said that according to the guests and visitors rule in the Residence Hall Handbook, guests are those of the same sex who stay overnight with a resident. However, they cannot stay more than three consecutive nights.

A visitor is defined as a non-gender specific person who does not stay the night but should not "stay for the entire 24-hour period." Cohabitation is when either guest or visitor stays but exceeds the time limit set.

"Students are responsible for reporting to the staff anybody they suspect that has broken the visitation rule," Jackson said. "Halls have the ability to set more restrictive rules, but these are the minimum."

Jackson said residents also must have permission from their roommates, and the number of people staying in the room cannot exceed capacity. If it's a two-person room, three cannot stay the night because of fire codes.

Jeanine Thompson, sophomore in pre-veterinary medicine, said the visitation policy is strict and hard to enforce because of people not reporting a problem.

"Somebody's going to have a friend or a sister that may want to come up for an entire week. Sometimes three days is not enough," Thompson said. "The resident assistants cannot check on it anyway because they can't go through each room."

Brian Glick, Marlatt Hall chief justice, said he knows violations of the visitation rule occur, but no complaints have been reported, and no cases have been brought to the judicial board.

"The rule is easy to enforce, but unless residents talk to their roommates, RAs and senior staff, no complaints are filed," Glick said.

Elizabeth Gunn, Van Zile Hall chief justice, said the closest case to breaking the visitation policy was when a female resident's boyfriend was caught using the women's bathroom.

She said the consequence was putting up an informational bulletin board or putting on a program for the hall. Other consequences could include probation, meaning if it happened again, it would go to a higher sanction.

"I don't think it is really a problem because of the 24-hour visitation rule," Gunn said. "Technically, two people could be studying all night, and no rule would be broken."

Some residents said they think the policy is good, because having people living in the halls who are not residents is unfair to those paying for the rooms.

A visitor is defined as a non-gender specific person who does not stay the night but should not "stay for the entire 24-hour period."

"It is a good policy to have, because guests don't pay the rent to live in the halls," John Eddy, senior in business, said. "They end up getting room and board for free."

Shayla Dyck, freshman in public relations and Ford Hall resident, said that by the time students attend college, they are adults and capable to make their own decisions about how long somebody should visit.

"I think that we are adults in college," Dyck said. "We should be able to say when and when we can't have visitors as long as it is fine with our roommates."

Jardine residents reach deal for Telecommunications service

■ System offers expanded options package.

By MOLLY MERSMANN
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Residents of Jardine Terrace Apartments now have an option to use the campus telephone system offered through K-State Telecommunications.

The Jardine Residents Association recently accepted a proposal from Telecommunications that allows residents to use the campus phone system.

"Essentially, it extends to us the telecommunications package that people who are living in the dorms have," said David Egleston, president of the association and a graduate student in psychology.

Egleston said Jardine residents have been working with Telecommunications for about two years to get an acceptable proposal.

"It's been a rather long process," he said. "We believe that it's something that will be very beneficial to people living in Jardine."

The new plan allows residents two options for a telephone service: They can choose to remain with their current long-distance carrier, or switch over to the campus system.

"Up until now, we've been on Southwestern Bell," Egleston said. "This is the first opportunity we've had to be on campus telecommunications."

Adalee Brenner, system administrator for Telecommunications, said that by switching to the campus system, residents would be given all the options offered to the residence halls, including call waiting and call forwarding.

"This includes all the features we offer," she said. "We don't charge anything extra for the features."

Brenner said residents who wanted to change systems would be given a campus phone number.

About 20 families have switched so far, Brenner said.

"If I was just moving into Jardine, I would go with the campus one," said Cathleen Martin, senior in early childhood education. "But we're moving in May, so we'll probably just stay with what we have."

Residents could choose to change their service at any time, Brenner said. She said they would have to buy the regular connection fee, but there would be no other additional charges.

Egleston said he was happy with the accepted proposal.

"We're able to accept this proposal because it guarantees students a choice of providers at every step along the way," he said.

VIOLATIONS

to meet quorum Thursday, Attorney General Kelly Dickson was given permission from Danos to appoint an ad-hoc committee, consisting of English, Election Committee Advisor Sarah Dillingham and Dickson to hold the violations hearing.

Members of the committee were not allowed to comment on the closed-violation hearing. Dickson could only comment on the procedure.

Although a contribution violation is considered a minor offense, Prieto and Bainter already pled guilty to posting signs in the residence hall area. If found guilty of a second minor violation, the two could have been disqualified from campaigning.

"I don't feel that's necessary," Prieto said. "The first violation, the posting one, Chris and I had no control over. That was pretty much out of our hands. When you think about these minor mistakes, that is no reason to disqualify someone, with all the hard work they've done and all the issues they've tackled."

Lucas Bucl, business senate candidate, also had a case brought against him. Bucl was found guilty of two campaign violations, both involving the residence halls. Although two minor violations equal a major violation and possible disqualification, the committee decided not to disqualify him.

Bucl received a $50 fine and was required to write two letters of apology to the Association of Residence Halls and to a business senate candidate. Ashley said this was the most expensive fine given for a violation this year.

"The justification that was used was that it was a serious offense and you are going into a serious body and you must let them know how serious you are," Ashley said of the committee's decision.

English said the elections committee has dealt with about 40 campaign violations this election. He said they were due mostly to rules enacted this year.

"We're dealing with a new process," he said. "It's just a matter of the elections committee making sure people follow these regulations."

Ashley said the election hearing committee did not convene last year, and this is the second year regulations provided for one.

"We were the guinea pigs," he said. "This is the first time the system was put to test, and in my estimate, it's failed."

Ashley said he will be recommending a review of the way violations are handled next year.

"I highly doubt that a situation like this will happen again," Ashley said.

Prieto said he and Bainter weren't worried about the outcome but felt this was the right thing to do.

"I feel relieved — it was another little thing in my head that didn't need to be there," he said. "Now we are going to concentrate on winning."

helping them along the way.

"If we hadn't made classes, we'd probably still be running in that stadium," joked George Morris, a former Tech player and a member of the Dodd Foundation's board of directors.

Members of the board of directors spoke about the criteria for the award and praised Snyder's efforts to ensure his players' success.

"We select not only a coach who wins but who also has a dedication to academics for the betterment of his student-athletes," said Kim King, a member of the foundation board.

King said that between Snyder's on-field record and the 43 academic all-conference players produced under his supervision, this year's decision was an easy one.

In recognizing Snyder, President Jon Wefald said the Dodd foundation had realized what K-Staters have known all along.

"We know that he is one of greatest football coaches in America today," Wefald said.

Despite the effusive praise, Snyder's acceptance speech was modest. Snyder did his utmost to deflect the spotlight with humility and humor.

"I'm puzzled as to how you could lose your last two ballgames and still receive an award, but I'm very appreciative," he said.

Snyder was quick to shift credit to others, and he praised by name most everyone from Wefald down to the team's equipment manager for their roles in the football program's success.

"It would be truly inappropriate for me to accept this award individually," Snyder said.

"I am so grateful to so many young people in our program, and to the coaches who have been here at Kansas State," Snyder said.

"It's not just Bill Snyder, it's not just the football program," he said.

"It's a state of achievement and a university of achievement because of the people," Snyder said.

"A.K.A., it's a real big hassle," Killingsworth said.

The honor code will be in full affect by the time fall 1999 freshmen are seniors. "Hopefully, we get to the point where individuals will not want to cheat," Killingsworth said.

In other Senate business, legislation was introduced to create a new privilege fee for Career and Employment Services amounting to $40,000.

The costs for this bill will not be added to privilege fee payments currently made by students. The budget will be funded through 2002, and will be reviewed prior to the 2002-2003 fiscal year.

SafeRide Committee Chair Apryl Mathes quickly reviewed the SafeRide report. There was no discussion.

Patterson said at halftime the team made changes and attempted to slow down Creighton's three-point shooting.

"I felt like we made the adjustments at the half," Patterson said. "When they started to slow down the game, it turned in our favor."

The second half began turbulently, however, with missed opportunities for both teams. K-State committed three quick turnovers early and Creighton led off the half by missing its first four shots. Creighton shot 21 percent.

Patterson said the team is finding ways to win despite mistakes.

"As we continue to evolve, we find ways to win the basketball game in spite of errors," Patterson said.

The Cats were led by their post players as the three accounted for 44 of the team's 71 points. Firsova led the way with 20 points, Ramage finished with 16 and Finkes scored eight points.

"It is a rarity in this program for us to really have a three-man rotation," Patterson said. "That is significant for this program."

Patterson said this was a big win for the team.

"It's the first post-season victory in a long time and its exciting to get the post-season victory," Patterson said.

Patterson said the game was not always pretty, but by continuing to advance the team has a chance to make things happen.

"I think that we have the opportunity to do some great things in the tournament," Patterson said.

"When you get thrown a curveball like this, it opens up an opportunity for somebody to be in a little bit different position," he said. "When the circumstances are different you never know how a player will respond to that."

Bietau said he was concerned about these matches but knows it is still early in the conference season.

"I don't feel great going into this weekend," he said. "Obviously, these are teams we want to compete with to meet some short-term goals."

"Even though this is a difficult situation this weekend it doesn't write off our season," Bietau said.

The Wildcats play Oklahoma at 11 a.m. Saturday and Oklahoma State at noon Sunday.

Studies. "But it actually means not allowing Russia and its partners in the Commonwealth of Independent States to get political and economic cooperation underway with Europe."

Russian Foreign Minister Igor Ivanov said extending NATO membership into Eastern Europe was "a movement in the wrong direction."

"All European states must cooperate in creating a joint security system," he was quoted as saying by the Interfax news agency. "All European states must work together in the interests of all countries rather than of separate groups."

Other countries, however, are knocking at NATO's door. Slovenia, Romania, Bulgaria, Slovakia, Lithuania, Estonia and Latvia will all be watching NATO's 50th birthday summit April 23-25 in Washington, D.C., hoping for a hint as to who might be next through NATO's door.

They are likely to be disappointed. Indications are NATO members, particularly the United States, are in no hurry for another round of expansion.

"Doors that are open, but that nobody can enter, are closed doors," Slovenian Foreign Minister Boris Frlec said.

The NATO that Poland, Hungary and the Czech Republic are joining is not the same alliance established by the Treaty of Washington in 1949.

Launched in the post-World War II era with the rise of Soviet power and the threat of communism, NATO bound 12 members together in a pact providing for collective defense, essentially against the threat from the east. Greece and Turkey joined in 1952, Germany in 1955 and Spain in 1982.

The new, 19-member NATO still regards collective defense as its core mission but now has turned its attention to what Gen. Henry Shelton, chairman of the U.S. Joint Chiefs of Staff, calls "the unpredictable and multidirectional nature of threats such as regional conflict, weapons of mass destruction and terrorism."

Secretary of State Madeleine Albright chose the city of Independence as the venue for the official NATO ceremony welcoming the new members because it was the home of President Truman who, along with then-Secretary of State Dean Acheson, developed the idea of the North Atlantic Alliance.

It's all a MYSTERY

K-State veterinary radiologist writes science-fiction mysteries featuring vampires

KANSAS STATE COLLEGE

Books occupy the entire back wall of Lee Killough's living room and study. Original paintings bought from art shows and science-fiction conventions adorn the walls. Opposite her couch, Killough has placed cover art that was commissioned for her science-fiction novels.

Killough is the author of 11 such novels and two compilation volumes. In addition, Killough has worked as chief radiological technician in K-State's College of Veterinary Medicine for the past 26 years.

She said she spends up to 12 hours on the weekends writing in her study.

"I enjoy art—I'm a very visual person," Killough said. "I see and hear the stories in my head as a screenplay, and then I try to find the words that describe the scene or the sounds or scent correctly."

Dr. Susan Kraft, K-State veterinary radiologist, said the two vocations keep Killough busy.

"She's very skilled as a radiologist and an author," Kraft said. "She also lectures with radiologists in human hospitals. She's a really busy person, and I admire her."

Although she has written in other genres, Killough said her main focus is science-fiction mystery. Her plots sometimes are set in the future or include supernatural elements. She said she writes science-fiction mysteries because of the plot similarities between science fiction and mystery.

"There's chaos," she said, "a disruption in order. Then, through the applications of science and reason, you restore order."

Killough said she sometimes receives interesting responses from readers.

"I've had people call me up in the middle of the night asking me where they could find the sequel to my vampire story," Killough said.

Killough said her interest in writing has been active since her childhood.

"I used to make my own bedtime stories when I was 4 or 5. It was still light out and we didn't feel like going to sleep, so my sister and I would lie there and we'd make up bedtime stories," she said. "Usually I'd make up stuff that interests me—cowboy stories. Or I'd make up new episodes of my favorite television shows."

In the early years of her writing, Killough said, she was reluctant to send her work out to publishers because of the rejection. It took three years to get her first short story published.

Killough published her first novel in 1979. Since then, Killough has been focusing on novels, many of which she dedicates to her late husband, Pat, who helped proofread her work and encouraged her to publish, she said.

"My husband Pat had a wonderful editor's ear," Killough said. "He was my most severe critic and biggest cheerleader."

Killough is working on a third vampire novel, an addition to the first two in the saga. They have been her best-selling series, even though she had to send the work to more than 40 publishers.

For her most recent novel, Killough compiled more than 100 pages in a black notebook. It includes a 37-page outline, a description of her fictitious town in the story, a map of that town, various police reports and character summaries. Killough said she also attended a police course to learn more about police work. It takes her about a year to research and write a novel, she said.

Killough said she plans to begin writing full-time soon, and that she might retire at the end of the year to do so.

"It's hard to make a living full-time as a writer—most writers have other jobs. But with my pension and several investments, I'll be able to afford writing," she said.

K-State to dedicate dance studios with ceremonies, performances

By JENN DAVOREN
KANSAS STATE COLLEGE

The K-State Department of Speech Communication, Theater and Dance dream of new offices and practice facilities in the basement of Nichols Hall came true after two years of fund-raising. The department settled into its refurbished space last semester.

Now, the university would like to give something back to a few of the people who made the move possible.

The four remodeled dance studios will be dedicated to some who assisted in the development of K-State's dance department.

"When we decided to dedicate the studios, we thought of people who were very influential in promoting dance at K-State," said Dave Procter, head of the dance department. "We wanted to think of the people that made the program what it is today."

The first person to be honored will be former instructor Luke Kahlich, who was a 17-year veteran of the dance department before his move to Temple University in 1997. Current students might remember Kahlich's last work with the university, his production of "Hair" in spring '97, which played to a sold-out McCain Auditorium.

Grace Hwang, member of the KSU Dance Development Board, said she best remembers Kahlich for the awards he received for his combined work in dance and theater.

"Luke is known for turning the dance department into a premier program," Hwang said. "He became nationally recognized for his choreography when he did all of our musicals."

"WITH THEIR HELP, WE'VE BUILT THE DANCE PROGRAM INTO SOMETHING THAT DANCE MAJORS CAN BE PROUD OF, BUT THAT STUDENTS WANTING A FUN CLASS CAN ENJOY."

—GRACE HWANG
MEMBER OF KSU DANCE DEVELOPMENT BOARD

The dedication will begin at 2 p.m. Saturday, as Nichols 26 becomes the Luke Kahlich Studio. Hwang said the ceremony would include dance presentations by some of Kahlich's former students, as well as music performed by the actors from his version of "Hair."

Dedications of the remaining studios will begin next month, as four more contributors will be honored for their assistance in departmental improvements.

Roni Mahler, a former dance department head and a current member of the Cleveland Ballet, is credited with turning what was once a few dance classes into a degree program. The dedication of her studio on April 10, following a performance of Springdance '99, will include the presentation of the Roni Mahler Award, given each year to K-State's most accomplished dancer.

Ruth Ann Wefald, an advocate of K-State's arts programs and head of the KSU Dance Development Board, will be honored April 30 for her fund-raising work. Hwang said Wefald always has been a fan of K-State theater and dance and lends a great deal of support to the department.

The fourth studio is to be named for Jacqueline Brewer and Bill Durke, local arts patrons whose joint contributions allowed the university to add additional space for the dance department. Hwang said Brewer and Durke, although not K-State alumni, attend almost every dance performance and are generous with their donations.

"These people are so supportive of the arts at K-State," Hwang said. "With their help, we've built the dance program into something that dance majors can be proud of, but that students wanting a fun class can enjoy."

Glee Club to perform with Clemson tonight

KANSAS STATE COLLEGE

Students have an opportunity to hear two all-male vocal groups perform a variety of traditional and popular music this weekend.

The K-State Men's Glee Club will share the stage with the Clemson University Glee Club at 7:30 tonight in All Faiths Chapel. General admission is $4.

Gerald Polich, professor of music and glee club director, said this concert will be the first joint performance with Clemson. K-State usually performs each year with the University of Nebraska, and the glee club also performed with the University of Kansas earlier this year.

The Men's Glee Club performs about 30 concerts a year, on and off campus. The vocal group has about 60 members, and most are non-music majors.

Polich said this concert was arranged because the 50 members of the Clemson choir are on a concert tour.

"Clemson is on spring break, and they're traveling from South Carolina to Colorado," Polich said. "They wanted a place to stay, so we set up this joint-exchange concert."

K-State and Clemson will perform a wide range of songs for the concert, he said.

"There's a variety of music—sacred, secular, folk, popular," Polich said. "For example, we're singing 'Unchained Melody' and 'Saints Go Marching In.'"

K-State will perform some Russian pieces as well, including "Salvation is Created" and "Grief." The concert is divided into formal and casual sections, and the singers change from suits to polo shirts, Polich said.

Polich said Clemson and K-State will perform separately, but the groups will combine to sing the finale.

"Clemson will sing their serious piece, and we'll sing our serious pieces, and they'll do their lighter thing and we'll do our lighter thing," Polich said. "Then all of us will sing a song called 'Brothers Sing On.'"

Jeff Lange, freshman in electronic journalism and glee club member, said the choir will have had only one rehearsal together.

He predicted the concert would have a strong and diverse turnout.

"It seems to me that coming as a new member in this group, people who have heard us come back often. Our shows attract more than just students," he said.

Lange said he thought having two glee clubs performing together would create an atmosphere of friendly rivalry.

"It's like a glee club competition, one school vs. another," he said. "We have a big fight-song medley with all of the fight songs of the Big 12 schools, and we get to make fun of everyone else. It's great fun."

CITY COMMISSION ELECTION

Candidates outline platforms for city election

Five Manhattan residents want a seat on the city commission.

Campaigns are in full swing.

The issues? Transportation, a living-wage proposal and community development.

Citizens decide on April 6.

Five candidates for Manhattan City Commission are preparing for the April 6 election and telling what they could offer on the city's highest governing board.

Depending upon how the voting goes, it is possible the commission could be completely unchanged in the end. All three commissioners whose seats are up for election are running again.

One pressing issue that won't come up specifically is the pending decision on whether or not to allow a Wal-Mart Supercenter near the intersection of Seth Childs and Southwind roads. City Attorney Bill Frost advised candidates earlier this month that a Supreme Court case indicates the issue, still undecided by the planning board and due to eventually come before the commission, is much like a court case.

City Clerk Rich Doan said the Wal-Mart proposal is "quasi-judicial."

"You are being asked to make a decision on a very specifically stated issue. You are essentially acting as judges," Doan said.

Commission candidates giving an opinion for or against an issue the commission has yet to hear could be seen as a judge giving a ruling before hearing the whole case, he said.

However, candidates can discuss issues related to the proposal as much as they want, he said.

"I think there are other ways to talk about it in generalities, overall concepts and beliefs," Doan said.

Bruce Snead

Bruce Snead, a state extension specialist in residential energy, said he is running to continue his work from the past four years. Snead was on the Manhattan Urban Area Planning Board between 1991 and 1995 and has been on the commission since 1995, including serving a year as mayor, beginning in 1997.

"There's been a number of projects and programs I've initiated and worked on that I think are crucial for the community," he said.

Snead said he would like to continue the comprehensive transportation plan, the housing study, studies for an indoor city recreation facility and the economic development micro-loan program.

On economic development, Snead said local businesses need to continue to diversify and expand a trend that began four years ago to reduce the city's reliance upon K-State and Fort Riley.

Businesses like Sykes Enterprises Inc., Manko and Transportation Design Manufacturing already have come in, and development simply needs to be adjusted for the future, he said.

Snead said he has to run on all of the issues that he handled in his current term on the commission and be able to answer for his record.

"A voter should vote for me if they look at what I've said and done, and they find they can trust me to make decisions that are in the best interests of the whole community," he said.

SNEAD

Ed Klimek

As a commissioner finishing a short-term two-year term, Ed Klimek, assistant vice president for business development and marketing for Kansas State Bank, said he feels his first term was largely preparation.

Elected in 1997, Klimek was just finishing an eight-year run on the Department of Parks and Recreation Advisory Board when he joined the commission.

"When you first go on, there's a period you're trying to absorb as much information as possible. It really takes about two years to get up to speed on city issues," he said.

Klimek said he is running so he can continue the work he is familiar with, including how the city operates and the issues facing it.

"City Hall is probably the closest form of government there is to the people. I've always been an advocate of sensible government. I want to continue that," he said.

With improvements to Kansas Highway 177, Seth Childs Road and U.S. Highway 24 completed in the last few years, Klimek said the city has put things into place to promote growth, and now the growth is approaching, both in housing and retail businesses.

Now, the commission will have to decide where that growth will take place, how it fits and who will benefit and lose, he said.

"We've got to look at sensible growth. You have to make some hard decisions on where to move," he said.

Klimek said he also wants to continue the current commission's trend for swift, sensible decisions without tabling issues as previous commissions have.

"I always joke about the t-word, and the t-word is table," Klimek said. "We need to make those decisions and we need to move on. I think we owe that to our citizens."

"We do our homework," he said.

Steve Hall

Steve Hall, researcher and grant writer for the National Institute for Land Management and Training, said he is hoping to reclaim a seat on the commission to continue the issues he has worked with since his first two-year term in 1993.

Hall, finishing his sixth year as a commissioner and his first as mayor, said he wanted to see a northeast community park for the Northview neighborhood, a first-responder program for the Manhattan Fire Department, a stronger emphasis upon street and water maintenance and more support for Fort Riley and the National Guard in the next term.

The first-responder program is designed to provide training similar to that of emergency medical technicians, and Manhattan is the only city with more than 2,500 inhabitants in the state that is still without it, he said.

"Basically, what it would do is put an additional 60 people on the streets who can respond to an emergency. I just think that would be a good investment," Hall said.

Hall said the top priority for any commission is maintenance of basic city services like roads, protection and water quality.

"I honestly believe the first thing we need to do is provide good basic services," he said.

The city has been doing more, Hall said. In 1995, expenditures for road maintenance ran between $200,000 and $300,000, he said, but by 1998, they were about $800,000 and will approach $1 million this year.

Part of keeping that up is growth, Hall said.

"I really don't think we have any other option than to grow. To not grow is to stagnate. You don't have a lot of choices. You either raise taxes or you cut services or you find people to pay," he said.

As a community with skilled workers, Manhattan can choose which businesses can come in to help share the debt though, he said.

Two new candidates also have thrown their hats into the ring, saying a fresh perspective is their asset.

Carol Peak

Carol Peak, director of the Kansas Center for Rural Initiatives and the Community Service Program on the K-State campus, has lived in Manhattan since 1971.

Serving her fourth and final year on the commission-appointed Manhattan Urban Area Planning Board this year, Peak said she decided to run for the commission to represent citizens who lack representation.

"I think there are some critical issues

The Commission

Since 1951, Manhattan has used the commission-manager form of government. The current commission consists of five members with three members' seats at a time up for non-partisan elections in April of odd-numbered years.

With each final election, the two candidates with the highest number of votes are given four-year terms. The member with the third-highest number gets a two-year term.

The commission has two primary duties. The first is to give final approval or denial for all city ordinances and resolutions as well as adoption of the annual city budget. The second is to direct the city manager.

Since the commissioners serve part time, City Manager Gary Greer fills in as a full-time administrator, supervising the heads of the seven city departments under the commission's direction.

facing us, and we need some new voices and some new perspective," she said.

Prime among those issues is the redevelopment of the growth policy Manhattan has maintained since 1976, Peak said. Public input would be vital to that redevelopment, she said.

"I think the growth issue is a priority — when and how we grow," Peak said.

Second, Peak said she wanted to review the city's process for economic development and funds given to aid businesses.

"In the very near term, I think we

NEWS IN BRIEF

U.S. won't arm opposition

WASHINGTON, D.C. — The leader of U.S. military forces in the Persian Gulf rejected the idea Thursday of arming Iraqi opposition groups, telling lawmakers none could oust Saddam Hussein.

"There aren't any groups that I could say that we could arm today that would march on Baghdad and successfully achieve regime change," Marine Gen. Anthony Zinni told the House Armed Services Committee. "I do not feel it's wise at this point to speak of providing weapons, creating camps for groups that are not viable."

Zinni said the Clinton administration should continue its long-term strategy of weakening Hussein militarily while supporting his opponents inside and outside of Iraq without letting the country disintegrate into chaos.

"If there was a way to get rid of him quickly, we'd do it," Walter Slocombe, undersecretary of defense for policy, said to a House committee.

Zinni, who has been accused of not supporting an array of opposition groups, denied the charge, saying, "I am all for encouraging them to work out their differences. I am all for them speaking of a post-Saddam regime."

He said Pentagon leaders are being cautious in pursuing President Clinton's call for a regime change because of fears that Iraq could splinter in the aftermath.

House approves Oz park bill

TOPEKA — Supporters of the proposed Wonderful World of Oz theme park are off to see the Senate.

The House on Thursday approved, 105-17, a bill designed to help the project's developers by changing laws dealing with bonds issued by the state for economic development projects.

The developers said they need the changes to help finance a $771.4 million resort complex on the grounds of the former Sunflower Army Ammunition Plant near DeSoto in Johnson County. Their plan includes about $270 million in state-issued bonds.

Legislators who support the bill said they believe it would give the Oz Entertainment Co. a chance to develop a theme park that could draw tourists from across the nation. The developers said the theme park would employ about 7,500 people.

Senate President Dick Bond, R-Overland Park, said he assumes the bill will pass in his chamber.

"I haven't heard any opposition in the Senate to the Oz project," he said.

Among the project's most enthusiastic supporters are Sen. Ben Vidricksen, R-Salina, chairman of the Senate Transportation and Tourism Committee and former Senate President Bud Burke, who lobbies for Oz Entertainment.

Not all legislators are sure the developers can bring their project to fruition, but many said the state should pass the bill to at least give them a chance.

Gov. Bill Graves indicated in an interview that he has questions about the project's viability.

"I feel like it's a tremendous undertaking, and lots and lots of bridges are going to have to be crossed before it becomes a reality," the governor said.

Tobacco probe at crossroad

WASHINGTON, D.C. — A five-year fraud investigation of Big Tobacco apparently is winding down, and Justice Department prosecutors must decide soon whether to try to bring more charges or shut down the effort.

The criminal prosecution effort lost steam in recent months as the White House turned greater attention to a potential civil lawsuit to recover the health-related costs of smoking. The Wall Street Journal reported Thursday.

The Justice Department has been investigating various elements of the tobacco industry, including several large companies.

face a decision of what our priorities are for economic prosperity," she said.

Carl Boger

Carl Boger, assistant professor of institutional management, said he's never run for public office before but has volunteered in civic groups across several states and is a member of the Manhattan Chamber of Commerce and the Convention and Visitors' Bureau.

Boger said he decided in January to run because of his balance between economic development and neighborhood concerns.

Boger said he wants to see reform of the city's expansion plan with more neighborhood and business involvement as well as the zoning master plan.

"In many respects, we only zone piecemeal. We need to go back to the city and then find out what kind of growth we want in what areas," Boger said.

Ideas like the local business park are the approach to take, Boger said, because they plan an entire area's use in the long run.

Boger's second campaign issue was city spending. He said he wanted the city no longer to review the budget by automatically keeping the past year's expenditures and deciding how much to add, but to review the budget line by line and eliminate items no longer important to priorities.

"I tend to be a moderate fiscal manager. Before I could support any taxation, we need the most efficient government we can have. I will look for every dime out of the city budget to fund what's a priority to the community," he said.

"I believe if we continue to raise taxes, I think we will become a very unattractive place for businesses to come and people to live," Boger said.

Today, all the chalking, debating and sign hanging will pay off for one of the student body presidential and vice presidential tickets.

Runoff elections for student body president and vice president are from 8 a.m. to 4 p.m. today in the K-State Student Union and from 4:30 to 7 p.m. in the Derby and Kramer dining centers.

Election results will be announced tonight.

Jason Heinrich and Gabe Eckert — who received 47.7 percent of the votes in the general elections last Wednesday — will be on the ticket, as will Leo Prieto and Chris Bainter, who received 27.7 percent of the votes.

Gayle Spencer, coordinator for the Office of Student Activities and Services, said it was important for students to be informed on the issues before voting.

"There are clearly two different tickets that have two different agendas to work on," Spencer said. "People need to decide who they support and go out and vote."

Spencer said the runoff election has not been highly publicized, due to the campaign issues the Elections Committee had to deal with last week.

She said she expects voter turnout to be average.

"I would expect we would have, hopefully, the same turnout we had last year," she said.

Heinrich said the large percentage he and Eckert received in the general elections did not necessarily predict the final results.

"It's definitely an interesting position to be in," he said. "When you have such a big lead in the runoff, it becomes more difficult to convince people they need to get out and vote."

Although Prieto and Bainter received a small percentage of the votes in the first elections, Prieto said he was confident they would do better in the runoffs.

"If we continue to mobilize and motivate people, get all the support from other candidates and get people who haven't voted to vote, I think we can do this," he said.

Both Heinrich and Prieto said they would continue campaigning throughout the day.

HEINRICH

PRIETO

"We'll be chalking and hanging up signs," Heinrich said. "We'll try to get all of our supporters and get them out to vote for us."

Prieto and Bainter's platform includes a mandatory rental inspection program for all off-campus student housing, a transportation system for K-State and the city of Manhattan, and a coalition initiative to promote and link campus organizations.

"These are mainstream issues that affect the K-State community as well as the Manhattan community," Prieto said.

If elected, Heinrich and Eckert said they plan to restructure the schedule of finals week, expand the residence hall food program to include the Union, increase Internet benefits for students and change the deadline for students who want to drop classes, giving them more time to get a full refund.

Both candidates said high student participation was necessary for a successful election.

"They should take an interest in the university and voice their opinion," Heinrich said.

Prieto said getting people to get out and vote was as important as the election results.

"We're not running against Heinrich and Eckert — we're running against apathy," Prieto said. "I really just want people to just get out and vote. We need to stand up for what we believe in, and these elections are the perfect opportunity."

Jones arrested on drug charges

By JOE HURLA
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A K-State student arrested for murder last month and released on bond was arrested again Friday on several drug-related charges.

Richard B. Jones, 711 N. Juliette Ave., Apt. 6, was arrested for sale of marijuana within 1,000 feet of a school, no drug tax stamp and possession of a controlled substance.

Jones, senior in business, was free on $50,000 bond following his arrest Feb. 25 for second-degree murder in the death of Steven J. Waters. Jones' arrest on drug charges was for events that reportedly happened after his release.

Also arrested Friday night were Nathan L. Fox, also of 711 N. Juliette Ave., Apt. 6, and Herbert M. Shanks, 2323 Cheryl Terrace.

Fox was arrested for possession of a controlled substance and criminal use of weapons.

Shanks was arrested for possession of a controlled substance with intent to sell, theft, no drug tax stamp, distribution of marijuana within 1,000 feet of a school and conspiracy.

Sgt. Bob Saber of the Riley County Police Department said he could not comment about any of the arrests because they are under investigation.

Saber said he could not even confirm that the arrests, all of which occurred at 7:30 p.m. Friday, were related.

Fox was one of the people present when Jones shot and killed

Committee votes to not support fee

By JENNIFER RYAN
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Privilege Fee Committee voted Sunday not to sponsor a proposed 3-year, $40,000 request from Career and Employment Services.

If granted, the request would have paid for printing of employment training guides. It also would have paid for the continuation and growth of professional development programs such as the part-time employment fair, volunteer fair and dining etiquette workshops.

The request for funding also would have paid for new programs such as internship fairs and alumni mentoring-shadowing programs. The purchase of new technology and the hiring of a network technician would have been covered by the request as well.

The motion to pull authorship and essentially kill the request for funding was passed 7-1-1, with one member abstaining from the decision.

Some members thought a user-fee rather than a privilege fee would be more applicable.

"In this case, the amount of benefit greatly outweighs the cost, and those who benefit from the services should pay for it," Agriculture Sen. David Hendricks said.

The request was sent before Student Senate in order to gain feedback from a larger number of people. The committee felt the request received less discussion than it had hoped, committee Chair Jeff Meder said.

Other committee members said they were displeased with the amount of discussion provided by senators as well.

"I wasn't surprised," Hendricks said. "The request came up at the Participants in the "Shamrock 2-mile Fun Run" run past a puddle on Moro Street on Saturday afternoon. There were 708 people entered in the races, but the number of actual participants decreased slightly because most of Kansas was under a winter-storm watch.

St. Patrick's Day runners brave cold temperatures, remember longtime participant Manhattan residents had two explanations for why they remained untouched by the winter storm that hit most of western and central Kansas.

It must have been either the luck of the Irish or the spirit of Joseph E. Smith, who ran in every St. Patrick's race over the last 20 years but died last May, that prevented snow and freezing temperatures from ruining Saturday's 21st annual St. Patrick's Day celebration in Aggieville.

The parade kicked off the day a few minutes after 11 a.m., with people layered in sweatshirts, longjohns, coats and stocking caps lined along Moro Street.

"It is only about 30 degrees," a parade watcher said. "We are lucky. It could have been a lot worse."

Most of the bystanders said they agreed the weather was not as severe as they anticipated. A winter storm advisory was posted and 5-7 inches of snow was predicted.

"I am very pleased the weather missed us," said Cheryl Sieben, director of the Aggieville Business Association. "Actually, I was surprised by the turnout of spectators for the parade and the participants for the race, considering how cold it was. I am happy we pulled it off."

The parade watchers did everything they could to keep warm. They jumped up and down, huddled together under blankets and drank hot chocolate and coffee.

"I thought about seeing if I could enter the two-mile run after the parade just so I could warm up,"

Clinton admits Chinese gained from nuclear security leak

By JIM ABRAMS
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — The Clinton administration conceded Sunday that the Chinese gained from technology allegedly stolen from a federal nuclear weapons lab, but insisted the government has responded decisively. Republicans disagreed and pressed for a comprehensive review of U.S. policy toward China.

"This is a very dangerous situation involving international espionage that directly threatens the security of all Americans," said Sen. John McCain, a GOP presidential hopeful. McCain, R-Ariz., said President Clinton should appoint a panel to investigate charges that China stole nuclear warhead technology.

Another senior GOP senator, Dick Lugar of Indiana, recommended a "very serious review" of the country's China policy. Lugar also said on NBC's "Meet the Press" that the United States should make clear to China that it will defend Taiwan from a Chinese missile attack.

The administration, represented by Energy Secretary Bill Richardson and the president's national security adviser, Sandy Berger, said the Chinese did benefit from the leak of information in the 1980s from the Los Alamos laboratory in New Mexico.

But, Berger said on NBC, "I think we moved swiftly, and I think we continue to impose on China the strictest controls."

Richardson said the administration had doubled the security budget for the national labs, instigated strong background checks for scientists visiting the labs from sensitive countries, and subjected employees to polygraphs.

The suspected spy, Taiwan-born American scientist Wen Ho Lee, has been questioned by the FBI and fired from his job. He has not been charged with any crime.

Republicans, seizing on the Los Alamos case, again contend that Clinton's policy seriously has been tainted by alleged illegal campaign contributions and the transfer of satellite technology that may have been used by the Chinese military.

A special congressional commission headed by Rep. Christopher Cox, R-Calif., has put together a still-classified report said to take strong issue with the administration's technology transfer policies to China.

House Majority Whip Tom DeLay, R-Texas, on "Fox News Sunday," said the report would show "an overwhelming shift in policy by this administration that a lot of technology was transferred to China, not just through espionage."

The report is scheduled to be

McCain to deliver lecture today

By TIM RICHARDSON
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Sen. John McCain, R-Ariz., will deliver the 114th Landon Lecture at 10:30 a.m. today in McCain Auditorium.

Charles Reagan, chairman of the lecture series, said McCain is a highly respected senator and has been vocal about tobacco regulation and campaign finance issues.

"He has been a leader for other senators," Reagan said.

McCain, who is serving his third Senate term, is a possible contender for the Republican presidential nomination in 2000. He has formed a presidential exploratory committee but has not yet made a decision on his candidacy.

Although McCain accepted the invitation to deliver a Landon Lecture last year, the impeachment trial made scheduling difficult.

"I was really pleased when he

Rodman granted leave from Lakers before road trip

INGLEWOOD, Calif. — The Dennis Rodman show with the Los Angeles Lakers has become a no-show.

Rodman was granted an indefinite leave of absence for unspecified personal reasons just as the team began a road trip of six games in nine days.

The Lakers confirmed Sunday that the eccentric rebounding champion missed practice the day before. He took his leave before the team's flight to Sacramento for Sunday night's game against the Kings.

"I'm not going to freak out about it," Lakers coach Kurt Rambis said after a brief talk with Rodman following Saturday's practice. "It's just something we're going to have to deal with."

Rambis said "nothing got resolved" in his conversation with Rodman. He declined further comment on possible reasons for Rodman's move.

Rodman's representatives did not immediately return calls.

Rambis said he does not know if Rodman will join the team on the road trip.

"I have no idea," Rambis said. "You're asking me hypothetical questions for which I have no answers."

Rambis said: "If he's there, great. If he's not, then I just have to adjust."

Lakers spokesman John Black said Saturday that team executives Jerry West and Mitch Kupchak would not comment on Rodman's leave.

Forensic experts return to scene of clinic bombing

ASHEVILLE, N.C. — Authorities did not discount a possible connection between a bombing at an abortion clinic and serial-bombing suspect Eric Rudolph, though they weren't discussing Rudolph on Sunday.

The clinic is about 75 miles east of the mountainous area where Rudolph is believed to be hiding. A news conference is scheduled for this morning at the U.S. attorney's office in Asheville.

When asked Saturday about a possible link between the explosion and Rudolph, FBI spokeswoman Joanne Morley said, "At this stage, we don't discount anything."

U.S. fighter planes attack Iraqi military defense sites

ANKARA, Turkey — U.S. warplanes responded to Iraqi fire on Sunday, bombing several Iraqi air defense sites during routine enforcement of no-fly zones, a U.S. military spokesman said.

Air Force F-15E jets attacked several anti-aircraft artillery sites northwest and west of the city of Mosul, 250 miles north of Baghdad, said Capt. Manning Brown, a spokesman for Operation Northern Watch based at Incirlik Air Base in Turkey.

"All coalition aircraft departed the area safely," Brown said.

In Washington, D.C., Pentagon spokesman Brian R. Kilgallen said U.S. and British jets also struck in southern Iraq, where Iraqi forces fired missiles at planes patrolling near As Samawah, 150 miles southeast of Baghdad, and Diwaniyah, 100 miles south of Baghdad.

"These hostile acts were the latest of more than 135 Iraqi provocations in the southern no-fly zone since (December)," Kilgallen said. He said all planes returned to base without any damage.

A military source for Iraq's air defense command in Baghdad said the planes struck civilian targets in the southern zone.

"The formations fired their bombs on civil establishments and bases" in southern Iraq, the Iraqi source said on condition of anonymity, adding that allied planes were driven back to Turkey, Saudi Arabia and Kuwait.

U.S. and British aircraft patrol no-fly zones over the north and south of Iraq to protect the Kurdish minority and Shiite rebels. The zones were set up after the 1991 Persian Gulf War.

Iraq, which does not recognize the zones, has challenged the allied jets almost daily since mid-December, triggering retaliatory strikes.

In Baghdad, the state-run Al-Jumhuriya daily on Sunday quoted Iraq's air force commander, Lt. Gen. Khaldoun Khatib Bakr, as saying that his country was determined to confront any violation of its airspace.

"We have prepared means to carry out our right to fly in our skies, and we are determined to break what they call the 'no-fly' zones," Bakr said.

Reducing Campus Waste

Program decreases waste sent to landfill

By LORI OLEEN
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The recycling program at K-State is working to increase the number of collection sites on campus and reduce the amount of material going to the landfill.

When it started about eight years ago, it served more than 11 buildings with recycling receptacles and had more material coming in. Several years after its start, the program's cost became too high and the number of buildings served was reduced to eight, John Woods, director of facilities services, said.

"When the program first started, there was more education, so a lot more was contributed," Woods said. "As it slowed down and education stopped, there were new students, new people and the recycling got less."

The program, which is coordinated by facilities services, currently collects aluminum cans and paper.

"We're collecting and taking it to Howie's Recycling, but we only get paid for the aluminum cans," Woods said. "We'd like to make it more profitable for somebody, by getting someone to pay us for cardboard and various other types of paper."

Facilities has one utility worker who gathers recycling three to four hours a day. Woods said recycling also takes place outside of facilities.

"There are a lot of aluminum cans being collected because that's all you can make money on," Woods said. "Various clubs and organizations, or even people in departments are doing collecting as well."

Woods said anything to keep materials from going to a landfill is worth the effort.

"We're going to run out of landfills, and it's going to cost much more in the future to have landfills," he said.

The university pays $33 a ton to take materials to the landfill. Woods said university administration has said it would pay the recycling program for every ton of waste that does not go to the landfill.

"What they're doing essentially is diverting the money to the recycling program," Woods said. "If the amount charged at the landfill goes up and it gets more costly to the university, they would be really interested in recycling."

During a one-year study sampling waste at the landfill, Eberle found a significant amount of the material that K-State sends to the landfill is recyclable.

Though efforts are being made to increase recycling, Woods said when he lifts lids off of campus trash cans, he sees at least four aluminum cans.

Bill Eberle, Department of Agronomy land-resource specialist, has researched and characterized Riley County and university waste. During a one-year study sampling waste at the landfill, Eberle found a significant amount of the material that K-State sends to the landfill is recyclable.

"We found roughly one-third of materials going through the transfer station from the university were easily recyclable," Eberle said. "If it were sorted, it could be recycled, so it does show if the program wants to implement other options how much is there."

Woods said the program tried to expand its recycling efforts last fall to target tailgaters at a home football game. Howie's Recycling donated two trailers for the Nebraska game, and students were asked to collect aluminum cans. It failed because student volunteers did not show up.

"We would like to do that in the future, and if we do an educational program, it's the same people coming to the parking lots every game," Woods said. "If we get them trained to separate their aluminum cans and get containers to put them in, we could easily collect them."

Bob Skillin, pest-control technician and volunteer recycling coordinator, said education is the key to the program's survival.

"I think if we relocate some of the receptacles to where they're more convenient for building users, we'll see better use," he said.

Eric Danielson, junior in social sciences, loads recyclable paper onto a dolly at Howie's Recycling on Friday morning. The recycling program picks up aluminum cans, white paper, computer paper and newsprint.

Grants will allow recycling program to buy new equipment, increase efficiency

■ KDHE, City/University funds will build program.

By LORI OLEEN
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A goal to gather recyclable material in every building might soon be accomplished because of grants received by the recycling program.

K-State received a $14,000 grant from the Kansas Department of Health and Environment for its recycling program, to be used on large cardboard and compartment trailers to make collections easier.

"The money essentially came from the state, but it also involves the city, university and county," John Woods, director of facilities services, said.

"It goes through the county because they were asking for $20,000 for education along with it, which got cut out, and we just got the trailers."

The K-State recycling program is losing money

"The money essentially comes from the state, but it also involves the city, university and county."

— John Woods director of facilities services

from the custodial budget, Woods said.

"It's about $12,000 a year out of the custodial budget," Woods said. "There's very little money coming in, and the only thing we get money for is aluminum cans, and that's maybe $60 a month, which is doing good."

The recycling program also received $64,000 from the city-university fund. This fund gives some of the money generated through taxes for projects benefiting both the university and city back to the university, Woods said.

Cluster containers will be bought for about $40,000, said Bob Skillin, pest-control technician and volunteer recycling coordinator.

"They are going to be placed outside where some of the redwood trash containers are currently, so people have various places on campus to gather aluminum, plastic and other recyclables," Skillin said.

Extra funding will help the program by supplying money for more campus education and worker wages, he said.

Additional grant applications can be made in April and in October.

"At some point we're going to lose that extra money, and we're going to have to swim for a while on our own," Skillin said. "What we would hope to do is build up so we can survive on our own."

Students should hear McCain's speech today

KState students have the opportunity to see one of the most influential figures in Washington, D.C., today.

U.S. Senator John McCain, R-Ariz., will deliver the 114th Landon Lecture in McCain Auditorium at 10:30 this morning.

Aside from his prominent status on the Senate, McCain has established an exploratory committee to determine whether he will pursue the presidency. His announcement on his candidacy is expected sometime this spring.

McCain is serving his third term in the Senate and is chairman of the Commerce, Science and Transportation Committee, as well as a member of the Armed Services and Indian Affairs committees. He has been chairman of the International Republican Institute since 1993.

Despite personal political affiliations, McCain's prominence in Washington cannot be ignored. He has been vocal on issues such as campaign finance reform, tax relief and tobacco regulation.

The Landon Lecture Series should be commended for being able to bring such a prestigious personality to speak to the K-State community.

Students shouldn't pass up the opportunity to see him, or at least hear him. The lecture will be broadcast live on the Internet at www.dce.ksu.edu/landon/.

K-State also is offering a free shuttle service for people attending McCain's lecture. A shuttle bus will be available from 9 to 10:20 a.m. in front of the press box in the west KSU Stadium parking lot.

make-believe LOVE

Movies create unrealistic expectations for romance, make people blind to true love

Over the weekend, my little sister in the Big Brothers/Big Sisters program wanted to see the new high school heartthrob movie "She's All That." It wasn't too bad in an "Ahhh, that's cute" '80s movie romance sort of way. Although no one loves '80s movies more than I, I came back from the movie with mixed emotions about the prince who falls in love with the nerdy, yet intelligent and beautiful-behind-those-huge-glasses girl plot.

My best friend Rose always tells me: "Life isn't like it is in the movies. It's better that way." My run-ins with movie-like situations make me want to believe her hypothesis, but in being a child of the '80s — one who grew up with fairy-tale-like Molly Ringwald movies and some of the sappiest music ever written — I'm, unfortunately, a hopeless romantic at heart.

Though the nerd in me longing to be swept off my feet by a guy who isn't intimidated by intelligence and opinion loves these movies and their silly, sappy plots, the realist and intelligent person in me knows deep down that these movies and all those fairy tales create non-realistic hopes, dreams and visions of how love is supposed to be for women and men everywhere.

The stories are everywhere, not just in Harlequin romances. They're in stories, movies, songs and books. Here's the basic plot recipe. Step No. 1: Girl A is either a) incredibly beautiful and voluptuous; or b) unwanted by the average male. Step No. 2: Boy B is a dream boat and either a) sees her across a crowded room, feels some kind of intangible attraction and falls madly in love with her; or b) gets to know her and falls madly in love with her sparkling personality and mind. Step No. 3: There's some kind of conflict, and everyone gets hurt. Step No. 4: Love conquers all. Step No. 5: They all live happily ever after.

My experience has taken me no farther than Step No. 3, and despite all the e-mail forwards and "true" stories of fairy-tale love, I haven't found one such relationship that has worked out. Everyone I know who is expecting an '80s movie fairy-tale ending still is waiting or has come to Rose's conclusion.

Perhaps you're thinking I'm nothing but a let-down woman, disappointed that my experiences with love have been unfruitful, and I'm upset because I don't have a date for Saturday night. This is not the case.

Maybe you think there's no harm in producing these romantic stories that make you feel nothing but warm and fuzzy inside. You leave the movie thinking, "Oh, that was beautiful" or "Wasn't that cute?" (as I said after "She's All That") and let it drop.

As quickly as you can say, "Wasn't that precious! Isn't love grand!", the damage is done to men and women everywhere. Unattainable standards are set for "real love," and the reality that love often is hard work is overlooked for simple attraction across a room or the dream of one day living a movie.

Women get the idea that love is like that: That you have to be beautiful to be found desirable, or that if you're unattractive, overweight or a bit nerdy, someday a perfect person will come along and you will be swept off your feet.

These women pass up tons of possibilities as they wait for the person in their head who is the right one. I used to do that — have in my mind a profile of the perfect guy. As luck would have it, the profile walks in, and one to four months later walks out or is kicked out, and then I alter my profile. Now, I've ditched profiles completely. How am I to know what a perfect person to suit me would be like when I haven't even figured myself out yet?

How one should be treated by a mate is also defined in the movies, and often when someone can't live up to these expectations, we start wondering if movie love is out there, if the scripted man or woman is waiting to be met.

What if there is no person? No other half? What if there are tons of people out there looking for a movie that doesn't exist?

Unrealistic romance in movies can be just as harmful as unrealistic violence in movies. It all rubs off on the people who watch it. Instead of going out into the world with the idea that violence is the only solution to a problem, people go out with the idea that love happens in a certain, unrealistic way. Instead of opening themselves up to physical pain, the movies open them up to the possibility of getting emotionally hurt.

I can enjoy these plots and say "Ahhhhh" all I want, but I refuse to let them alter my sense of reality.

Congratulations to Shawn Rhodes for his 1-for-15 three-point performance. But hey, it's baseball season now. Oh yeah, we don't have a field.

I see why nobody showed up for the basketball game Wednesday night. The wait for tickets was ridiculous, and all you got was the worst seats in the house.

Balance is needed between seriousness, laughter

WELLS

So, how's your week been?

Mine's been rather odd. I've finished three columns I didn't want to, but had to write. It's been draining. You see, I suffer from an inherent inability to remain serious.

It's not genetic, that's for sure, but there's something about me that rejects the cold order of grimness for the burning panic of irreverence. I still have respect for those things I feel compelled to laugh at, but you know, sometimes, I have to make light when trapped in the darkness.

"Sometimes," says Deborah Murray, an instructor whose opinion I value deeply, "laughter is a defense mechanism." This I understand. It defuses tension, drains hostility and connects with a part of a person that rationality and seriousness can't reach and electrifies it.

I've appreciated the feedback I've received in the last few weeks; indeed, I've been overwhelmed by it. Someday I'll catch up with all of it and thank them all. But right now, I just can't face it — too heavy for me now.

I couldn't be a doctor, at least not a good one. The itch inside of me to make light of an impossibly grim situation is too powerful. I'd been convinced that this made me a bad person. (Well, I am, really, but for a whole different cornucopia of reasons.) "You must have respect," they say. "You must conduct yourself with dignity." Anyone who's seen my desk knows the inherent hopelessness of that statement.

I won't conform to pure seriousness. I can't. There's too much of the manic storm inside me. I've seen too much of the world and life to see it with a straight face. I can manage enough energy to suck it up for those moments when I absolutely must show such self-restraint. I save it for funerals, state troopers and when people waste my damn-valuable time trying to sell me things I just want to wad up and stuff back in their face. (Hey, slick, I got your magazine subscriptions RIGHT HERE! whap).

It took me a while to realize this, but I don't even do it just for me, not directly. I have to use that defense mechanism that Deborah mentioned: I have to put people at ease. I, personally, don't laugh much. I note funny things in my head and nod. Sometimes, under extreme duress or ultimate hilarity (say, the SGA election results) I'll actually let a laugh slip out. But generally, it's just not me.

Fortunately, in this realm, as in most others, I seem to be the exception. Most of my acquaintances and co-workers like to laugh. Sure, they like to be provoked to think seriously about a topic, but cerebral exercise doesn't have the raw endorphin rush of a rib-tickling moment. Ponder, if you will, the complex intricacies of quantum theory or Shakespeare's problem plays. Now imagine a dead hamster on a hamster wheel, with the wheel still spinning. Flop, flop, flop. There. Feel that rush. Don't you feel better?

I like hearing people laugh, getting that rush. If one person laughs today, based on anything I've done, hey, that's my justification for existence right there.

Seriousness is like death to me. It's cold; it's harsh; it's inevitable and sometimes necessary. But then, life is more than just the absence of death. There are existences that, quite frankly, don't qualify as life. (Jerry Springer pops to mind). I see a void between death and life, a void that can be filled with laughter. The best, fullest expression of humanity is found in laughter. There's nothing else that defines us and fulfills us more than a good laugh.

Sometimes it's born of coldly analytical irony or a juxtaposition of images. Often it comes from the forge of pain and cruelty. Still, it's what sets us apart, what makes us unique and what makes us alive.

I can't be serious all the time, and I certainly can't laugh all the time. Either would put me in an asylum or in a political career. The last few weeks were a forced solemnity that demanded expression, but now, I just want to let the pendulum swing.

And I'll do that after a two-week nap.

Symposium helps ease college fears

■ Sigma Gamma Rho sorority answered questions from area high school students Saturday.

By ROCHELLE STEELE
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Thirteen teen-agers spent Saturday morning discussing options for their future instead of sleeping in.

Sigma Gamma Rho sorority sponsored a symposium for area youth at 10 a.m. in the K-State Student Union Cottonwood Room.

The symposium and luncheon that followed were the final events of the sorority's Sigma Week '99. Keeping with the theme "Improving Our Future by Uplifting Our Youth," the forum gave participants an opportunity to ask a panel questions about any topic.

Symposium chairwoman Michong Kim said she invited students from Junction City and Manhattan high schools as well as students with Flint Hills Job Corps and Upward Bound to participate.

"We wanted to do a community service for the kids that would actually help the kids," Kim, sophomore in open option, said. "I want the high school students to know that there is help out there if needed."

An eight-person panel, composed of K-State students, administration officials and community leaders, answered questions and shared personal experiences.

Some questions concerned the transition from high school to college and the differences between the two. Panelist Polica Houston told the youth that upholding their values will ease the transition.

"It's not just school that you have to deal with," Houston, junior in elementary education, said. "There are other things, and if you get caught up in those other things, it could be your downfall."

"If you keep the values you have now, you'll be all right in college," he said.

Another concern was the availability of help with college classwork.

Candi Pitts, academic skills specialist, described the different outlets available but said students must be willing to seek help.

"The worst thing to do is to say, 'If I ignore it, it will go away,'" she said. "It won't go away. There is a lot of help out there, but you have to go out and get it."

Being self-motivated is the key to college success, panelist David Thompson told the group.

"The biggest part of college is psychological," Thompson said, graduate student in family studies. "That doesn't just mean increasing your gray matter, but putting forth that extra effort to study and get help when you need it."

Participants said the forum helped dismiss some fears about college.

"This helped me know that I can go to college without having a lot of money," Dolly Hooks, 17-year-old Job Corps student, said. "Also, it was good to know that I'm not the only one who goes through these situations."

Ajiaga Hudson, a sophomore at Junction City High School, said the forum made her think about her future.

"I learned that it is best to go to college right after high school so your mind doesn't get lazy," she said.

"They inspired me to want to further my studies and go to college," Hudson said.

Second-Round Blues

Cats lose to Arkansas State in second round of WNIT

STORY BY NICK BRATKOVIC

The K-State women's basketball team's roller-coaster season ended Sunday. The Cats were defeated 83-70 on the road by Arkansas State in the WNIT's second round, ending K-State's season with a 16-14 record.

In the first half, Arkansas State went on a 16-0 run and built a 27-point halftime lead. In the half, K-State shot just 27 percent from the field.

The Cats battled back in the second half by shooting 51 percent from the field and going 5-12 from three-point range. K-State also out-rebounded Arkansas State, but the Cats committed 21 turnovers to nullify the rebound effect.

As the game came to close, K-State was unable to overcome its first-half deficit. Arkansas State was led in scoring by guard Julie Hagood, who led Arkansas State to victory with a 21-point scoring effort.

Junior center Angie Finkes led the Cats in scoring with 20 points and 10 rebounds, while freshman guard Kristin Rethman tossed in 18 points.

The loss comes after K-State's 71-60 victory over Creighton in the first round of the WNIT at Bramlage Coliseum on Thursday.

K-State coach Deb Patterson said after the team's victory against Creighton that the team needed to learn how to win on the road. She also said the last home game against the Blue Jays was a special one.

"If this is the last game we play at home this season," Patterson said at that time. "It was a great last game to play."

At home this season, the Cats defeated several ranked opponents, including Kansas — which the team defeated in front of 8,000 fans.

Patterson said the WNIT win Thursday was a great achievement for the developing program.

"It's another milestone for this program," Patterson said. "It's really exciting — this is the first post-season victory in a long time here at K-State and it's exciting to get the post-season victory."

Now, after Sunday's loss, the team is forced to wait until next year. Forward Brandy Harris said she is excited about the teams three 6-foot recruits.

"It is awesome, I am really looking forward to those post players coming in and helping us out," Harris said.

Track team led by Zsivoczky in first outdoor meet of season

■ Cats take 3 of top 5 spots, other members set personal records at meet.

By SARAH CRAIG
KANSAS STATE COLLEGEAN

The K-State track and field team went south this weekend to compete in the first outdoor meet of the year. The Wildcats did not bring the entire team to the College Station Relays at Texas A&M; only the multi-event athletes and throwers made the trip.

The multi-event athletes were led by junior Attila Zsivoczky, who won the heptathlon with a score of 8,123, a personal and school record and NCAA qualifying mark. Next in line was junior Jason Williams in third place, scoring 7,550, a personal record.

"That's Jason's personal record, I think it would put him third on the all-time school list," Coach Cliff Rovelto said.

"That score will definitely get him into the NCAA meet."

Junior Justin Robinson placed fifth in the meet with a score of 7,223, which is an NCAA provisional qualifying mark and personal record.

"Justin had a 350-point personal record, he had a couple of personal records in the meet but nothing really spectacular — kind of like Jason, it just shows how much he's improved across the board," Rovelto said.

The Cats took three of the top five spots in the meet without their fourth multi-event man, Thomas Weiler, whose return to the field has been delayed because of a hip injury.

On the women's side of the multi-events, sophomore Carmen Wright placed fourth in the pentathlon, scoring 5,244, a personal and school record and provisional qualifying mark.

"Last year that would have been right on the bubble, but she'll score a lot higher than that — she had a 280-point personal record," Rovelto said.

Rovelto said this meet shows the kind of abilities these athletes have, the men particularly being one of the strongest groups he ever has coached.

"It's really good to have all four of them at national-qualifying performances the first meet of the year," Rovelto said.

"There's no collegiate returning who's scored as high as Attila. There's a couple capable, but no one's done it."

In men's competition, the field athletes were led by sophomore Tamek Sinsy, who won the hammer throw with a throw of 190 feet, 4 inches and placed fourth in the discus.

Senior Todd Petersen placed fifth in the hammer, while junior Jared Wisdom placed second in the javelin.

In women's competition, senior Renetta Seiler won the hammer throw with a stadium record and placed second in the discus. Senior Anna Whitham placed second in both the hammer and the javelin.

Rovelto said that although the throwers had some success, he expects better marks later in the season, particularly due to weather factors in this meet.

"It was very, very poor weather, very cold and windy. The 190 was a quality throw for opening up the year. The other marks are kind of sub par, but under the conditions, they weren't sub par because it was bad," Rovelto said. "A lot of the marks aren't as impressive as those athletes are."

"There's no collegiate returning who's scored as high as Attila (Zsivoczky). There's a couple capable, but no one's done it."

Lewis, Holyfield match ends in controversial draw

By ED SCHUYLER JR.
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Lennox Lewis and Evander Holyfield's battle for the undisputed heavyweight championship will be disputed forever — especially by Lewis and his fans.

"I am in disbelief," Lewis said after his 12-round draw with Holyfield early Sunday.

So were many others in a sellout crowd at Madison Square Garden.

It appeared Lewis dominated the fight, but he got the nod of only one of the three judges. Another voted for Holyfield, and a third called the fight even, making it a draw.

Outraged by the decision was Emanuel Steward, Lewis' trainer, who once had trained Holyfield for two fights.

"It looks like the judges were rigged ... almost," Steward said.

Lewis, a 33-year-old from Britain, left the ring as only the WBC champion, while the 36-year-old Holyfield retained the WBA-IBF titles.

"This was a situation where politics was involved," Lewis said. "When you've got a fight of this magnitude — I'm not saying Don King had anything to do with it, but this is one of his shows. I am in America. ... The only thing I can do is call for an automatic rematch."

King, Holyfield's promoter and promoter of the fight, said: "All the ingredients spell, 'Let's do it again. Let's not use judges as a scapegoat. Let's do it again.'"

"There's always next time,"

Thumbs up to Wooten, Lennox, the Royals, Riley County High School and more

McLeMORE

I would like to dedicate this column to former student body presidential candidate Rick Wooten, whose presidential dreams were dashed by my slipshod reporting.

Last week in my sports fan voter's guide, I implied that Wooten was a loser and that he wasn't a sports fan. I was wrong.

Wooten is a sports fan. I only hope that my heartfelt apology can make up for ruining the dreams of a man who worked so hard. A man who spent $24 out of his own pocket to make a valiant run for office. In memoriam: Rick Wooten's political career. March 1, 1999 - March 9, 1999.

LENNOX LEWIS LETDOWN

Saturday night was supposed to be a breakthrough night for boxing. The winner of the fight between Lennox Lewis and Evander Holyfield was supposed to walk away as the uncontested heavyweight champion of the world. For the first time in a long time, one man was going to hold the championship belts from all three main boxing associations: the WBA, WBC and IBF. The match had all the makings of a classic. Holyfield said from the beginning that he would send Lewis to the mat in the third round. As it turned out, neither opponent even came close to the mat. Lewis, a native of Great Britain, dominated the bout from start to finish. He was able to land nearly as many punches (348) as Holyfield could throw (385). However, when the bout concluded after 12 rounds with both men standing, the fight was ruled a draw.

It wasn't just the fans from Britain who were outraged. Thousands of viewers nationwide who shelled out $50 to watch the match on pay-per-view were in a huff. After such a great fight, with so much on the line, and a seemingly clear winner, it was hard to see how the ruling could have been a draw. I favored Lewis, but I would have found it tough to vote for him. It is beyond my comprehension to believe that the country that gave us the Spice Girls, the Beatles and head cheese could produce the heavyweight champion of the world.

Obviously, the judges felt the same way.

A ROYAL MIRACLE

Celebrate now, because this might never happen again. The Royals actually lead Major League Baseball with 10 wins. They are close to leading the league in batting average and ERA. Is this exciting? Yes. Is it a fluke? Maybe. Some of the young players are trying so hard to make a good impression that they are killing themselves to make big plays. The sad fact is that it can only go down from here. Trust me, down is exactly where it's likely to go.

FALCON FRENZY

Congratulations are in order for the Riley County High School girls' basketball team. The Falcons captured the girl's 3A state championship on Saturday. The Falcons were led by senior standout Bethany McGraw, who not only gets the ball to the hoop but plays defense so well you'd think she came out of the womb in man-to-man coverage. Let's think this through. She's a scoring threat, a defensive brick wall, and she's local. Gee, I hope Coach Deb Patterson reads this thing.

LAST OF THE GREAT ONES

The saddest part of Joe DiMaggio's death is that most of us never got to see him play. From what I hear, he was the embodiment of grace, class and ability. That can't be said for the current major-league superstars, including Ken Griffey Jr., Mike Piazza or Kevin Brown. Joltin' Joe played in a time when the game was important and a salary was just a nice benefit on the side. If only that were true now.

WEBER STATE WHO?

So, how about those Weber State Wildcats? Sound unfamiliar? Go check your NCAA Tournament bracket and find the blank spot in the first round where you previously had North Carolina. Who would have thought the Weber State Wildcats could beat one of the best teams out of the ACC? Heck, who around here would have guessed that a team called the "Wildcats" could actually win a single game? Weber State wasn't even supposed to win the opening tip-off, let alone the whole game. In the second round, they were able to take the Florida Gators to overtime before folding. Not bad for a second-rate team out of the Big Sky Conference. I would have been happy if our Wildcats could have just made it to the second round of the NIT. It's a good thing that I don't hold grudges.

FIRSOVA IS ON FIRE

If things keep going the way they're going for the K-State women's basketball team, we might actually have to learn how to pronounce Firsova. Lately, junior forward Olga Firsova has been the go-to gal for the Wildcats. In the first game of the WNIT, Firsova exploded for a double-double, her fifth of the year. If she can keep this up she just might become the most dominant basketball player ever named Olga.

Author marks 100th birthday

By CRISTY ANDERSON
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Manhattan community celebrated a centennial Sunday, but it wasn't to honor a street or a building or some other piece of the infrastructure. The centennial was in honor of one woman.

Jessie Lee Brown Foveaux, a local author, is built of tougher stuff than bricks and mortar. She will be 100 years old Thursday. A birthday celebration and autograph session was given for her at Varney's Book Store on Sunday.

Foveaux has received worldwide attention for writing "Any Given Day," a book about her life.

"There has been a huge stir in the community about the sum of money and the worldwide attention she has received," said Brad Merryman, supervisor at Varney's Book Store. "She is a humble little lady and doesn't understand the notoriety."

After turning down many television opportunities, Foveaux appeared on "The Rosie O'Donnell Show" in January 1998.

"She decided to go on the 'The Rosie O'Donnell Show' because she had never been to New York," Marion Foveaux, her son, said. "We had first-class everything. It fascinated her, she said she thought she was Alice in Wonderland."

Diane Waddell, Foveaux's granddaughter, said her grandmother enjoyed the people aspect of the publicity but not the celebrity aspect. Foveaux has autographed more than 1,000 copies of her book for readers in her own home.

Foveaux said several people stop to visit his mother each week — people come from all over the country.

"She has made no attempt to keep herself hidden," Merryman said.

Foveaux said Jessie has received birthday cards from President Clinton, Gov. Bill Graves and many other people. He said she loves it when anyone sends her stuff, and she tries to respond to all the letters she receives.

She can't do it all, but she would write back to everyone if she could, Foveaux said.

Waddell said her grandmother's publicity began when an article about her memoirs appeared on the front page of The Wall Street Journal. After the article was printed, everyone was calling to publish the story, she said.

"She wrote a nice story, and it affected people," Waddell said. "It wasn't anything she set out to do — it was an accident."

Merryman said Jessie wrote the book when she was 80 years old. She took a class, and the instructor liked her story so well he sent to a publisher without her knowledge, Merryman said.

"She never intended for it to be anything but for her grandchildren,"

Jessie Lee Brown Foveaux, a local author, opens presents at her 100th birthday party Sunday afternoon at Varney's Bookstore. Aside from opening presents, Foveaux signed more than 50 books at her party.

Merryman said. "The rest of us are lucky she agreed to let it be published."

Merryman said Jessie describes herself as an old grandma in her book. She writes in a straight-forward way about many of the hardships and good times she has lived through. She comes from a strong background of faith, and she gets preachy like a grandma would, Merryman said.

"In her book, she talks about the early days of Manhattan, and that is fascinating," Merryman said. "She gives grandmotherly advice and tells stories about funny things she did as a young girl. She definitely looks for the best side of everything and usually finds it."

Waddell said her grandmother is special because of her belief in God and her humor.

"I remember one joke she always told was 'Have a seat in my parlor, said the spider to the fly,'" Waddell said.

Merryman said Jessie planned to attend Sunday's celebration no matter what the weather was like, but she prayed for a nice day. I told her she got her answer, Merryman said.

Jessie also is known for her beautiful lawn. Waddell said she lived two doors away from her grandmother when she was growing up, and she remembers how beautiful her yard was every year.

"That flower garden was her world," Foveaux said. "The only thing that makes her sad is that she can't trim the flowers and hoe her garden by herself anymore."

Since her story has been published, Jessie has written a few other pieces, Foveaux said.

"I've sent them to the agent, and it is hard to tell what will happen," Foveaux said.

released in several weeks. But the committee, which wants to make almost all of it public, and the administration are negotiating over what should be declassified.

Cox, on ABC's "This Week," said the committee "believes that not only now but for the indefinite future we have serious counterintelligence problems at our national laboratories and elsewhere throughout the government."

"I disagree," Richardson said on ABC. "I believe we have taken some dramatic steps to deal with this problem."

The latest edition of Time magazine reports that Lee, who worked at Los Alamos for more than two decades, attended a 1988 seminar in Hong Kong and, with Chinese officials present, allegedly divulged sensitive information on the miniaturization involved in the design of America's most modern warhead, the W-88.

The Los Angeles Times, in a report Sunday, quoted law-enforcement officials as saying the investigation had "hit a wall" because of lack of hard evidence and Lee's refusal to cooperate.

The administration first became aware of possible espionage at Los Alamos in 1996. Republicans have asked why it took so long to investigate the case and remove Lee from his job.

"There should have been a fire bell in the night," GOP commentator Pat Buchanan, another presidential aspirant, said on NBC.

"Someone has to explain that, and someone has to be held accountable," said Buchanan, who says Berger should lose his job over the matter.

But other Republicans put the matter in a different perspective.

"These lapses go back to the beginning of time," Rep. Porter Goss, R-Fla., the head of the House intelligence committee, said on Fox. "Pearl Harbor was perhaps one of our biggest lapses."

accepted," Reagan said. "He had accepted our invitation about six months ago, but it was difficult to schedule a specific time."

McCain graduated from the U.S. Naval Academy and served 22 years in the Navy. He is now chairman of the Senate Commerce, Science and Transportation Committee and is a member of the Armed Services and Indian Affairs committees. McCain served two terms in the House, beginning in 1982, before joining the Senate in 1986. He also has served as chairman of the International Republican Institute since 1993.

Reagan said McCain is an important figure in today's politics.

"Sometimes students realize afterward what they missed," he said. "This one I recommend they not miss."

another parade watcher said. "Then I decided a doughnut and a cup of coffee would be better."

The Shamrock two-mile Fun Run, 10K road race and the Leprechaun three-mile walk followed the parade. The race was dedicated to Smith and was the first St. Patrick's road race he did not participate in.

All of the runners received white T-shirts with green lettering that read "Running for Joe."

"This year's T-shirt showed what the race was about," Harvard Townsend, race director, said.

"Joe helped make this event, and I wanted people to know that."

The race was sponsored by Kansas State Bank, Ballard's Sporting Goods, KMKF-FM 101.5, KMAN-AM 1350, KXBB-FM 104 and Flinthills Harriers. All the proceeds benefited Special Olympics.

The participants received trophies, medals or ribbons, depending on how they placed and whether they ran the 10K or 2-mile. The overall men's and women's 10K winners received $200.

Dave Halferty, Topeka resident, won the men's 10K overall and Kirsten O'Hara, Manhattan resident, won the women's 10K overall.

There were 708 participants entered in the race, but that number decreased slightly because most of Kansas was under a winter storm watch.

"It was an excellent turnout considering the weather," said Becky Ballard, co-owner of Ballard's Sporting Goods. "We were down by about 50 participants, but the runners we usually get from all over the state and western Kansas were not able to make it."

The weather might have been a factor for the travelers who wanted to attend the event and the spectators who stood in the cold. The runners did not seem to be affected by the chilling temperature and biting wind.

"It was perfect weather for a runner. You didn't have to worry about getting too hot," said Mariah Smith, freshman in open-option and second-place finisher in the 19-24 age division for the 2-mile run. "I even got to wear my shamrock stocking cap."

end of the year, and this Senate's been so busy. Everyone has pretty much their own agendas at this time of year. Educating people with only a short amount of time wouldn't work."

However, Business Sen. Nick Mueiting said it would be possible to bring the request before Senate again next year. He said the senators seemed disinterested in the plan this late in the term.

"Judging from the amount of discussion Thursday, it didn't really seem like they cared," Mueiting said.

Tracey Fraser, director of Career and Employment Services, said she was pleased with the thoughtful feedback provided by committee members.

lacked power. His most effective weapon was a right-hand lead.

"He looked like an old man in there," Lewis said. "He looked slow to me, and he missed a lot of punches."

Lewis, however, grew cautious after the fifth round instead of applying the kind of pressure that could have shortened the fight.

"I didn't want to fall for any sucker things," Lewis said.

Still, Lewis seemed a clear winner.

"I had to say it," Steward said. "This is a sport I make my living in. I am ashamed of it."

After the fifth round, the crowd became relatively quiet. Even the 7,000 British fans could only launch into an occasional song.

When the decision was announced there were loud boos. Then the crowd quickly dispersed as if it had watched nothing more than a bad play.

This was the fourth draw in the history of heavyweight title bouts. The last came in 1983, when Michael Dokes kept his WBA crown against Mike Weaver.

Waters on Jan. 5.

Police said they have received conflicting stories about what transpired the night of the break-in, and no motive for the break-in has been released.

Waters' companions on the night of the shooting were Tyler Gruelle, who was allegedly shot in the foot by Jones as well, and Eric D. Wilson, who was uninjured. RCPD said two of the intruders were armed.

Gruelle and Wilson both were arrested and charged with one felony count of conspiracy to commit burglary, aggravated burglary, aggravated assault and criminal possession of firearms.

Jones' bond was set at $100,000 after his first arrest, but was reduced to $50,000 by the judge at the bond hearing. The reduction, however, was dependent on certain constraints, Assistant Riley County Attorney Brenda Jordan said.

Under the conditions of the reduction, Jones was required to submit to electronic monitoring at his own expense and can be only at home, work, or classes, Jordan said.

Jones' bond reduction also stipulated he not use any illicit drugs or be found where such drugs would be available, that he not possess a firearm or be found where one would be available and must submit to random drug testing, she said.

Saber said Jones' new bond was set at $110,000, which includes the $50,000 from his prior arrest. Fox's bond was set at $5,000 and Shanks' was set at $2,000.

Smoking linked to crime in study

■ Study finds children of mothers who smoke more likely to be criminals.

By TAMMY WEBBER
ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHICAGO — Babies whose mothers smoke during pregnancy could be at a higher risk of growing up to be criminals, new research suggests.

Although such links have been studied in children and teen-agers, researchers said a study published in this month's Archives of General Psychiatry is the first to examine the relationship between mothers who smoke and their children's adult behavior.

While stopping short of saying that babies whose mothers smoked while pregnant will become criminals, researchers said their findings are significant.

"Our results support our hypothesis that maternal smoking during pregnancy is related to increased rates of crime in adult offspring," the authors wrote, adding that the results "suggest an additional critical reason to support public health efforts aimed at improving maternal health behaviors during pregnancy."

However, an expert not involved in the study said there is not enough research to say prenatal smoking can be a risk factor for adult crimes.

The researchers from Emory University in Atlanta, the University of Southern California and the Institute of Preventive Medicine in Denmark based their findings on data for 4,169 males born in Copenhagen between September 1959 and December 1961 and studied the men's arrest histories at age 34.

The number of cigarettes their mothers had smoked during the third trimester of pregnancy affected the men's arrests for nonviolent and violent crimes as adults, even after factoring out other possible causes such as alcohol use, divorce, income and home environment, researchers said in the study, which was released Sunday.

Only one other risk factor — delivery complications — was found to be significant.

Researchers found that more than a quarter of the men whose mothers had the highest levels of smoking and delivery complications were arrested for a violent crime as an adult.

Further study should be aimed at determining the effects of smoking on the brain of developing fetuses and to see if specific agents in tobacco smoke can be more directly linked to antisocial behavior, they said.

A spokeswoman for Patricia Brennan, the study's lead author and a researcher at Emory's Department of Psychology, did not return a page Sunday seeking comment.

David Fergusson, a psychiatric epidemiologist at the Christchurch School of Medicine in New Zealand, said there is not enough research to add prenatal smoking to the list of established risk factors for adult crimes.

Fergusson, who wrote an editorial accompanying the article, said the study did not rule out the possibility that genetics — not smoking — caused behavior problems.

"Mothers who smoke during pregnancy are often young women who have previous misconduct problems and there is quite an inheritability of misconduct problems," Fergusson said in a telephone interview Sunday.

Jail population reaches all-time high

■ U.S. might surpass Russia as country with highest incarceration rate.

By ANNE GEARAN
ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — The number of American adults imprisoned has more than doubled during the past 12 years, reaching its highest level ever last year, the Justice Department announced Sunday. The United States soon might surpass Russia as the country with the highest rate of incarceration.

At mid-1998, jails and prisons held an estimated 1.8 million people, according to a Bureau of Justice Statistics report. At the end of 1985, the figure was 744,208.

Viewed another way, there were 668 inmates for every 100,000 U.S. residents as of June 1998, compared with 313 inmates per 100,000 people in 1985.

In Russia, 685 people out of every 100,000 are behind bars, according to The Sentencing Project, a U.S. group critical of the general trend toward harsher sentencing of American criminals.

A planned amnesty of 100,000 prisoners in Russia and the expectation of continued increases in the U.S. inmate population means the United States probably will become the world's leading jailer "in a year or two," said Jenni Gainsborough, a Sentencing Project spokeswoman.

The number of people imprisoned in the United States has grown for more than a quarter-century, helped by increased drug prosecutions and a general get-tough policy on all classes of offenders.

More criminals serving longer sentences led the inmate population to top 1 million in 1990; it has continued to rise.

About two-thirds of the nation's inmates are in state and federal prisons; the remaining one-third are in local jails.

Prisons generally hold convicted criminals sentenced to terms longer than one year, and jails typically keep those awaiting trial and those sentenced to 12 months or fewer.

In the June 1998 Justice Department survey, 1.2 million people were held in prisons, while local jails held about 600,000 men and women. Local jails also supervised more than 72,000 people under various outside work, treatment or home-detention programs.

The survey showed the total number of people behind bars grew by 4.4 percent from June 1997.

Between the end of 1990 and mid-1998, the incarcerated population grew an average 6.2 percent annually, said the report's author, statistician Darrell Gilliard.

Although the total growth rate was slower last year, Gilliard said the difference is not statistically significant.

"The numbers have been pretty steady throughout the 1990s, with a pretty steady increase every year," he said.

Gilliard's report showed the number of inmates in state prisons grew 4.1 percent last year; the number in federal prisons grew 8.3 percent; and the number in local jails grew 4.5 percent.

The figures closely track numbers released last summer that showed a 5.2-percent growth rate in federal and state prison inmates by the end of 1997.

BRAVING THE COLD

Skiin' Freezin' Hot Tub Classic raises money for K-State Water Ski Team travel, equipment

STORY BY JENN DAVOREN AND KELLY D. LYNN ■ PHOTOS BY CLIF PALMBERG

It might seem more than a little crazy to try to brave the chilly waters of Tuttle Creek Reservoir in mid-March.

However, for K-State's Water Ski Team to earn the money needed to prepare for a season of tournament competition, it had to defy the elements.

Brenden Wirth (left), senior in political science, jokes in a hot tub with Chris Bieber, senior in mechanical engineering, and Kevin Fischer, freshmen in business and pre-law, Saturday morning at Stockdale Cove at Tuttle Creek Reservoir. After skiing, there were two hot tubs available on the beach to warm up skiers.

On Saturday, the team's Skiin' Freezin' Hot Tub Classic earned extra revenue for travel and equipment expenses. From 11 a.m. to 6 p.m., the team welcomed anyone interested in skiing, wakeboarding, kneeboarding or barefooting. More than 40 water skiers participated, said Kelly Klein, graduate student in agronomy and a member of the team.

"We had a great turnout, and everyone had a really good time," she said. "I'm a die-hard skier, so it was fun to get out on the water. It was cold, but it was worth it."

The $20 entry fee not only gave participants a chance to ski twice during the day but also to earn access to the two hot tubs available at Stockdale Cove.

"This is our big fund-raiser for the rest of the season," said Nick Heckerson, vice president of recruiting sponsorship and a freshman in business administration.

"But, we get a little money from the university," Heckerson said. The money will go toward sending the team to the national tournament in the fall and to purchase new equipment for the team, including skis, wet suits, and ropes and handles.

Team secretary Lisa Leatherwood, sophomore in agricultural business, said that in addition to the team's 60 members, KJCK-FM 94.5 also helped with the event.

Eric Rotert, junior in construction science and a team member, said those who chose not to ski still enjoyed the event.

"We had some people just come out and sit in the hot tub," he said.

Although not everyone skied, Klein said she believed the event meant much more than just skiing.

"The best part of it was just the camaraderie, getting all the skiers together and not having any competition, just having fun," she said.

The team, which began its 16th season this month, will put the money from the event to use next month when tournament skiing begins for the year. On April 24 and 25, the Wildcat Invitational will draw water-skiing teams from the entire Midwest region to Super Lake in Emporia.

"In events like that, everybody involved with the team competes on the B team," Heckerson said. "In this sort of competition, we have slalom, trick and jump events."

Competition will pick up again in July with a state tournament but will taper off until the team's chance at the conference championship in September.

The team has its practice sessions throughout the year at Tuttle Creek and Super Lake mainly to prepare for the regional tournament. This year's regionals will take place Oct. 1-3.

Heckerson said, the team has set its hopes much higher than succeeding at this year's regionals, even though it placed fifth in the Midwest region competition last year. The team was one of 22 in the competition.

"What we're eventually hoping for is the national tournament in Sacramento this fall," Heckerson said. "We're really going to have to make a lot of money this year to travel that far."

Students interested in joining the Water Ski Team can do so for $25 a semester or $45 for a year. Leatherwood said the members of the team would be willing to work with new team members, even those who might not be experienced with water sports.

"Anybody can join whenever they want," Leatherwood said. "If you don't know what you're doing, we'll show you how."

Brenden Wirth, senior in political science and the team's president, said this diversity of skills in the Water Ski Team makes it original.

"Our team ranges from beginners all the way to people who have been skiing in tournaments since they were younger," he said.

The Cryptoquip is a substitution cipher in which one letter stands for another. If you think that X equals O, it will equal O throughout the puzzle. Single letters, short words and words using an apostrophe give you clues to locating vowels. Solution is by trial and error. © 1999 by King Features Syndicate, Inc.

New museum director hopes to increase exhibits

By GIGI MCCALL
KANSAS STATE COLLEGEAN

When Lorne Render begins work May 1 as the new director of the Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art, he said he expects to be making a number of changes.

Render, who left his job as executive director of the C.M. Russell Museum of Great Falls, Mont., said he is ready for the latitude the Beach art museum offers.

"I am looking forward to the challenges and opportunities of the Beach Museum of Art," Render said. "With a relatively new institution, I believe that the potential for collection of growth and for creating new exhibitions, programs and other services is enormous, and I am excited and pleased about joining in this work."

The museum opened its doors to the public in October 1996.

Render said his first goal at the Beach art museum will be to learn about the museum itself, as well as the university and surrounding community. From this, he said, he will develop a clear mission and vision for the museum.

"I believe very strongly that a museum must serve the community in which it is located and be a part of that community," he said. "Involvement within a community reinforces the message that museums are for everyone and are indeed central to the character and makeup of the community."

Render said he first became interested in art as an undergraduate student at the University of Oregon.

"I found that art can stir your emotions, challenge your intellect and give a person a great deal of satisfaction," he said.

This interest has continued over the years, he said. At the Glenbow Museum in Calgary, Alberta, Render was able to work with a wide range of art, including work in different styles and media with multiple messages and themes. He said he found this diversity to be stimulating, and his work let him share it with the public through exhibitions, programs and gallery planning.

While at Canada's Royal Ontario Museum, Render said his focus shifted from art to exploring means of communicating information about artifacts, objects and ideas through exhibitions and gallery development.

Working at the C.M. Russell Museum, meanwhile, Render said he had been able to return to his early interest in art, which he said he will be able to continue at the Beach art museum.

Render's accomplishments at the C.M. Russell Museum were numerous. During his time there, Render restored the Charles M. Russell Log Cabin Studio at a cost of $250,000, led a fund-raising effort to purchase an oil painting by Russell for $1.1 million, and raised $5.3 million of a capital campaign goal of $5.7 million, nearly doubling the staff size of the museum.

Katherine Schlageck, coordinator for the Beach art museum, said she thought Render's experience is vital to the future endeavors of the museum.

"He has done everything from being a curator to teaching art history to being head of exhibits to eight years of experience as a director," Schlageck said. "All of these things make him a very seasoned director and professional."

Render said he is anxious to test the various possibilities of where the museum can go.

"The Beach Museum of Art has an enormous potential that will only be limited by the vision we create for it," Render said. "The facility is first-class, the university is very supportive of the museum and the staff are a strong professional group."

"With all these elements, the possibilities are virtually endless. We will be able to bring an exciting, energetic and educational museum that complements Kansas State University and benefits the community."

Residents invited to block party

■ Greeks, neighborhood residents strengthen ties with social event, barbecue on Fairchild Avenue.

By ANNETTE SWEET
KANSAS STATE COLLEGE

An island of grass at the end of Fairchild Avenue between a block of houses was the setting for a party sponsored by Alpha Xi Delta and Lambda Chi Alpha.

The block party brought together nine greek houses on Denison, Fairchild and Sunset avenues. Local residents who live on Fairchild and in the surrounding area were asked to join in the festivities.

"The block party is a way for us to increase a good relationship between the greeks and the neighborhood," said Brooke Haertling, member of Alpha Xi Delta. "We feel it is important to establish this because we work directly with our neighbors, to involve them, especially when we have functions."

The Lambda Chi Alpha Xi barbecue was from 4 to 6 p.m. Sunday. Hamburgers, hot dogs and chips were served. There were also cookies, brownies and punch. Each greek house donated $50 so members and local residents could eat for free, Haertling said.

Haertling said she and Jonas Heinrich, member of Lambda Chi Alpha, got the idea to have a block party since there hadn't been a function like it in quite awhile.

Fliers advertising the event were put in neighbor's doors. Heinrich said he expected a turnout of 150-400 people.

"This event lets us meet the people who are living beside and in front of us," he said. "It enables us to get together with local residences and have a good time."

Haertling said they also encouraged those involved to invite friends and family members.

More than 200 people showed up for the party, and there was a mix of different people from the greek houses. Neighbors were seen mingling within the crowd.

Most residents were older and had lived in the area for quite awhile. Some said that whenever the greek houses have a function, they are invited to attend.

"We have lived in this area for 29 years across from Alpha Xi and next to the Tri-Delts," Gary Conrad, local resident, said. "They are very good neighbors, and this is a great neighborhood. My wife and I think it is a nice idea and gesture for all of us to get together."

The chapters had to get a permit from the city of Manhattan and be approved by the Riley County Police Department and Fire Department, Haertling said.

Chris Althoff, Beta Theta Pi member, said he hoped many people would come and get involved with the event.

He said it would be great if the local residents would be there, but that it also was an opportunity for people in the house to get together.

"It is a great chance for us to do something together and hang out," Althoff said.

"Because of our busy schedules, this enables us to have some fun and meet new people."

Customers upset by KGE power sales to Western

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WICHITA — In the middle of summer 1998, Western Resources Inc. and KGE asked some of Kansas' largest businesses to reduce their power consumption drastically so the utility would have enough power to go around.

But KGE apparently had lots of electricity available and was sending large amounts of power north to Western's other utility, KPL Gas Service, at low prices.

Those practices are apparently legal and specified in contracts between KPL and KGE, but some of Western's big customers want the Kansas Corporation Commission to look into the matter.

Western executives said they simply were operating the entire electrical system in the most efficient way possible, which in the long run saves customers money in the form of lower electric rates.

The information disclosed in the documents obtained recently by the city of Wichita, which are public record, has added fuel to the simmering discontent among large business customers over being forced to cut power usage and shut down operations last summer.

The new disclosures could also have implications for all KGE customers, business and residential.

KGE's residential customers pay an average of 33 percent more than customers of Western's KPL division, which serves Topeka and most of north-east Kansas.

Western officials blame the Wolf Creek nuclear power plant for the rate disparity. Under terms of the 1992 merger of KPL and KGE, which created Western, the responsibility for paying off the $3 billion plant remained with Wichita-area ratepayers.

What happened last summer, critics said, shows the flimsiness of Western officials' arguments justifying a two-company, two-rate structure.

"KGE customers pay the bill for KGE, and they should have first call on that power," said Jim Zakoura, an Overland Park attorney who is representing a group of large companies challenging Western on rate and service issues, including Boeing Co., Raytheon Aircraft Co. and Farmland Industries.

"They can run this as one system if there's one set of rates," Zakoura said. "If there's two sets of rates, then KGE customers should get the power they're paying for."

Wichita mayor Bob Knight — who has demanded rate parity be a condition of Western's proposed merger with Kansas City Power & Light Co. — said he has not studied the information in the Western documents in detail. But Knight said the city is concerned about the power sales from KGE to KPL at a time when area businesses were being told to limit their power use.

Farmland Industries, with the support of other companies, has asked the KCC to investigate the circumstances of last summer's power cutbacks fully. Farmland claims it paid nearly 84 times the normal rate for electricity at one of its oil refineries last summer.

The city of Wichita has weighed in with the KCC in support of Kansas City, Mo.-based Farmland's request for a thorough investigation.

Filings in the case by Farmland include a detailed written agreement, originally filed with the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission, specifying exactly how Western operates KPL and KGE as a single, interconnected electrical generation and transmission system.

If KPL is short of power, the agreement states, it can buy power from KGE, and KGE can buy extra power from KPL if it needs to.

Documents filed with the KCC by the city do show that in 1996 and 1997, power went both ways on the Western system. Some months KPL bought more power, some months KGE.

Beginning in the summer of 1997, KGE sold large amounts of power to KPL. When the weather got hot and stayed hot last June, KPL was forced to rely heavily on KGE for electricity.

Some large companies, like Farmland and Vulcan, had interruptible power supply contracts, which give KGE the right to shut off their power in an emergency situation in return for special electric rates. Others, like Boeing and Raytheon, complied voluntarily.

"We were told if we didn't curtail there wouldn't be enough power to meet all the needs and there would be brownouts and rolling blackouts," Raytheon spokesman Jim Gregory said. "People would be without electricity. We didn't want to be a part of that disaster."

"So when we learn there was power going outside this (KGE's) primary service district, it is upsetting."

Carl Koupal, executive vice president of Western, said that during the periods of peak demand the utility company's managers had to make hard decisions about how to spread the available electricity around and still maintain mandated reserves.

At times Western was buying electricity from other utilities, but at other times Koupal said there was little or no extra power to buy because the heat wave gripping much of the country was straining electric generation and transmission resources everywhere.

"We were in a situation last summer where we were very close, on a number of days, in terms of our ability to serve our customers," Koupal said.

HEINRICH WINS

Gabe Eckert (right) and Jason Heinrich (center) are congratulated on their victory by Joe Ashley, elections chair, Monday night at the Lambda Chi Alpha house. Heinrich and Eckert won the election by receiving 52.5 percent of the vote.

Heinrich wins presidency by 115 votes

By JODY JOHNSON
KANSAS STATE COLLEGLIAN

Jason Heinrich and Gabe Eckert said following the elections that they would be relieved to get back to their schoolwork.

"If we lose, I'm going to have to explain why my grades went down," Heinrich said.

But that was before the runoff election results were known.

At about 9 p.m., Student Body President Tracey Mann, Vice President Andy Macklin and Elections Chair Joe Ashley arrived at Lambda Chi Alpha to announce the news of Heinrich and Eckert's win over opponents Leo Prieto and Chris Bainter. Heinrich and Eckert received about 52.5 percent of the total votes Monday.

The crowd of more than 80 supporters clapped and screamed after learning all its campaigning efforts had paid off, trading hugs and cigars as news of the victory spread.

"Thank you very, very, very much," Heinrich said during his victory speech. "I hope you guys can enjoy this with us. This is for you."

Eckert, senior in agricultural journalism, thanked the crowd for its support and hard work during the campaign.

"You guys have been so awesome," Eckert said. "It means a lot to us, everyone coming together for a common cause."

Eckert said the best part of the campaign has been meeting new people and having the support of their friends. He said their first priority as student body president and vice president is to thank everyone who helped them win and to call everyone who participated in the campaign.

"We've been really blessed that we've had a lot of supporters who really believe in our issues," Eckert said.

Heinrich said they want to get started right away on their plans for electronic voting.

"I'd like to see that implemented for next year," he said.

They'd also like to have much of the work done by the end of the semester on plans for changing the reimbursement schedule for dropping classes, Eckert said.

Eckert said they will look at Prieto and Bainter's issues as well.

The two plan to do research over the summer break on their other issues, such as changing the dining hall meal plans to include meals at the K-State Student Union and restructuring finals week.

Heinrich, senior in industrial engineering, said he was nervous for the election results because Prieto and Bainter had a great campaign.

"I'd prepared myself for anything," Heinrich said. "Either one of us would have done a great job."

Heinrich said Prieto was a great candidate for the job.

"He'll run for office somewhere down the road, and hopefully I won't have to run against him again," Heinrich said.

Supporters at the gathering said they were thrilled that the campaign was finally over.

"Jason and Gabe did a heck of a job,"

Prieto closes gap, falls short in runoff election

By ANGELA KISTNER

Wednesday, Leo Prieto and Chris Bainter were almost 600 votes shy of Jason Heinrich and Gabe Eckert, leaders in the general elections, but were still in second.

Monday night, Prieto and Bainter had a increase of about 300 votes in the runoff election.

But were still in second.

Although the disappointment showed on Prieto and Bainter's faces when the phone call came, they still kept a positive attitude.

"We made a good run," said Prieto, student body presidential candidate. "We did all right."

"Today's a victory for us."

Salina election rules cause confusion

By JOE HURLA
KANSAS STATE COLLEGLIAN

Students at the K-State-Salina campus did not get to take part in electing the new K-State student body president and vice president this year.

Elections Chair Joe Ashley said a change in the Student Governing Association constitution two years ago changed the voting regulations. With the new regulations, students at Salina are not permitted to vote.

Last year, even with the new regulations, students on the Salina campus were allowed to vote. Ashley said this was because of failures by last year's Elections Committee.

"The Elections Committee was really, really not good last year," Ashley said. "We're just trying to clean up the mess."

Ashley said he got a late start cleaning up because he didn't know about the change until Monday afternoon.

"I didn't know that was a part of our constitution," Ashley said. "I just received word."

Kim Oliver, student body vice president at K-State-Salina, said that as of Monday afternoon, Ashley told her students in Salina would get to take part in the runoff election.

"He said to just go ahead and vote," Oliver said.

But, Ashley said, after reviewing the SGA constitution, he had realized students at K-State-Salina were not allowed to vote.

He said the regulations were changed a few years ago because a separate, independent SGA was created at Salina.

K-State-Salina students were denied the right to vote for student body president and vice president when this change was made, Ashley said.

Oliver said she and many other students were not happy with the way K-State-Salina is being treated.

"I don't feel that this is a very fair set-up," Oliver said. "We would like to see a change."

Bill Muir, faculty representative on Student Senate, said the change was prompted by students at Salina.

"They decided they wanted their own local autonomy," Muir said. "Logistically, they think they can better govern their own campus."

Ashley said it was logical not to allow students at K-State-Salina to participate in the general election.

"It just makes sense not to let them vote," Ashley said.

Oliver said she thought it made sense to let students at Salina vote, since the president represents them, too.

She said the current student body president, Tracy Mann, represents all K-State students, including those on the Salina campus, when he and the rest of the student advisory committee meet with the Kansas Board of Regents to discuss campus issues.

Because of this, she said she thought students at the Salina campus should have a hand in electing the president.

"I don't want to make this a big scandalous thing," Oliver said. "But we didn't make it that way. It's so unfortunate."

"We just want somebody to remember that we're over here."

Ethnic Albanians say they'll sign peace accord

By DEBORAH SEWARD
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

PARIS — Ethnic Albanians delivered a clear "yes" Monday to an international peace plan for Kosovo, leaving Yugoslavia's president with a stark choice — make peace or face NATO's wrath.

After more than five weeks of intense diplomatic pressure, the Kosovo Albanian delegation told international mediators Monday they were ready to sign the peace accord that gives them wide political autonomy but not the vote on independence they wanted.

"This is not an ideal solution, but peace in Kosovo has no price," said Hashim Thaci, the head of the ethnic Albanian delegation to Paris, where a second round of peace talks had opened only hours before.

He told reporters the delegates hoped to sign the agreement Tuesday.

The French and British foreign ministers praised the decision and said it will heighten pressure on Yugoslav President Slobodan Milosevic to swallow the deal, which calls for NATO troops to enforce it.

"The Albanian side has shown real courage in convincing the people that it is necessary to make a compromise. We need the Serb side to show the same courage," said British Foreign Secretary Robin Cook, co-chairman of the talks along with French Foreign Minister Hubert Vedrine.

The ethnic Albanians' earlier reluctance to sign the agreement led to the breakdown of the first round of talks last month and prevented NATO from carrying out threatened airstrikes if the Serbs failed to agree.

With new fighting breaking out across Kosovo — a southern province of the Yugoslav republic of Serbia, where ethnic Albanians make up 90 percent of the population — there are fears the conflict could lead to a bigger war in the Balkans.

International monitors said seven Yugoslav army soldiers were wounded in fighting in the Vucitrn area Monday, and another was shot in the arm as he drove just north of the capital, Pristina.

In Washington, D.C., President Clinton called on Milosevic to follow the ethnic Albanians' lead "so we can avoid further conflict and bloodshed." He said NATO airstrikes are still possible.

"If he shows intransigence and aggression, I think that, from our point of view, we would have little option," Clinton said.

Serbian President Milan Milutinovic dismissed the Albanian announcement, saying "unilateral signing does not mean anything."

Asked whether NATO bombing of Serbia was now more likely, he said: "This is not out of the question, but we are not afraid of that."

Milutinovic repeated the Serb refusal to consider a military force, but he said the Serb side was working positively on the political aspect of a deal.

Milutinovic said that during Monday's discussions, international mediators excluded three annexes on military implementation of the deal.

The mediators and U.S. State Department spokesman James Rubin denied Milutinovic's statement, which apparently was intended to make the deal more palatable for the Yugoslav public.

Vedrine said no important changes in the deal are possible and warned the Serbs to speed up their decision.

Murder suspect detained after violating bond terms

The arrest Friday of a K-State student who was free on bond occurred after police obtained a warrant and entered his home in search of drugs, police said Monday.

Riley County Police Department Lt. Herb Crosby said K-State student Richard B. Jones, 711 N. Juliette Ave., Apt. 6, was arrested along with Nathan L. Fox, 711 N. Juliette Ave., Apt. 6, and Herbert M. Shanks, 2323 Cheryl Terrace, for drug-related charges Friday night.

Crosby said he was not at liberty to comment on anything else about the case because it had been given to the Riley County attorney's office.

Riley County Assistant Attorney Brenda Jordan, who is in charge of the case, was not available for comment.

Jones, sophomore in sociology, was arrested for murder Feb. 25 in the case of the death of Steven J. Waters. Jones was released on a reduced bond of $50,000.

Jones' bond was reduced with several stipulations. Under the conditions of the reduction, Jones was required to submit to electronic monitoring at his own expense and could be only at home, work or classes, Jordan said.

Jones' bond reduction also stipulated he not use any illicit drugs or be found where such drugs would be available, that he not possess a firearm or be found where one would be available and must submit to random drug testing.

Jones is being detained at the Riley County Jail on $110,000 bond. Both Fox and Shanks are free on bond.

House proposal would help struggling school districts

TOPEKA — The House Education Committee is reviewing a school finance proposal that would help districts that are losing students by taking money from districts that are growing.

The plan also would increase the base budget for public elementary, junior high and high schools by $67 per pupil to $3,787 per pupil. It also would provide more money for medium-sized school districts and increase funding for programs that assist poor children.

The proposal is designed to address the concerns of school districts with declining student enrollments. This school year, enrollments dropped in 189 of the state's 304 school districts, or 62 percent.

The plan would help those districts by holding down the amount of money going to districts with increasing enrollments.

"That's altogether strange," said Rep. Ralph Tanner, R-Baldwin City, the committee's chairman. However, he said, "The formula that's set in place is flawed and has been somewhat flawed by time."

Taking the biggest hit would be the Blue Valley district in Johnson County, where enrollment has grown by 88 percent in the past decade.

Bill clarifying Hard 40 rule earns first-round approval

TOPEKA — In response to a Kansas Supreme Court ruling, the House gave first-round approval Monday to a bill that makes clear what lawmakers want considered when courts impose the Hard 40 sentence.

The bill was advanced on a voice vote. A final vote of approval is needed to send the bill to the Senate.

Now, people convicted of first-degree murder can be ordered to serve at least 40 years before being considered for parole. Without that sentence, murderers face life in prison, but they can become eligible for parole after 15 or 25 years, depending on the circumstances.

To receive the Hard 40, the murderer must have violated one of several specific circumstances listed in the statutes, including committing the crime in "an especially heinous, atrocious or cruel manner."

In January, the Supreme Court ruled a Wichita man who killed his former girlfriend by hitting her with an ax seven times couldn't receive the Hard 40. The court concluded that since the woman died from the first blow, that removed the crime from the realm of "an especially heinous, atrocious or cruel crime."

The Hard 40 sentence was enacted in 1990 and amended in 1994 to simplify its imposition. The only punishment more harsh is the death penalty, which the state reinstituted in 1994 for seven types of murder.

House Judiciary Chairman Mike O'Neal said the court ruled from the standpoint of the victim's perspective rather than society's perspective.

"We're sending a clear message that that isn't what we meant," O'Neal, R-Hutchinson, said. "From a legal point, the court's decision can be defended, but from society's point of view, it's hard to defend."

Boeing will cut more jobs; Puget Sound most affected

SEATTLE — The Boeing Co. said Monday it will cut 6,700 more jobs than expected due to reduced overtime and other manufacturing efficiencies in its commercial airplane division.

The additional cuts mean that total job reductions by the end of the year will be at the high end of a range of 28,000 to 38,000 that the company announced earlier, a Boeing spokesman said.

"They began to make a turn in the fourth quarter last year and have continued to make improvements in production," Boeing spokesman Peter Conte said. "As you get better and more efficient, you need less people to do the job."

While there will be layoffs, about half of the job cuts will come through attrition, he said.

Boeing's profits and its stock price have been severely depressed during most of the past two years — the result of production line snarls, parts shortages and late aircraft deliveries.

The troubles began as Boeing was cranking up assembly lines to record production rates and asking workers to work vast amounts of overtime.

Since then, sales have slackened due partly to recessions in Asia and other markets, and Boeing plans to reduce its production rates over the next two years.

It announced late last year it would reduce employment from its mid-1998 peak of 238,400 down to between 185,000 to 195,000 by the end of 2000.

The Puget Sound area, where the majority of Boeing jetliners are assembled, will bear the brunt of the layoffs.

Machinists union officials said the new job cuts are uncalled for. The union, which represents Boeing production workers in Seattle and Wichita, negotiates a new contract with Boeing later this year.

Senator urges foreign-policy reform to protect U.S.

McCain outlines 5 principles of diplomacy

By KELLY FURNAS
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Possible presidential candidate Sen. John McCain, R-Ariz., outlined his proposal for American diplomacy Monday morning at McCain Auditorium in the 114th Landon Lecture.

The bulk of his lecture criticized President Clinton's administration and its policies toward China, citing the possibility of ballistic missile attacks and threats to the American way of life.

"Virtually at the speed of light, the president's view of Chinese leaders has changed from the bloody butchers of Beijing to our strategic partners," McCain said. "They are neither. They are determined, indeed, ruthless defenders of their regime, who will do whatever is necessary, no matter how inhumane or offensive to us, to pursue their own interests."

He also pointed out allegations of a relationship between Democratic campaign contributions and the administration's approval of technology transfers to China.

"Far more distressing is the charge that they are, at least in part, a consequence of the president placing his own re-election before the supreme national interest," he said. "And if it is proven beyond a reasonable doubt, it will bring more of history's shame upon the president than his personal failings will — indeed, greater shame than any president has ever suffered."

McCain spoke little about his possible bid for the presidency, except to say that it was difficult.

"It is very difficult to run for president of the United States. It's even more difficult if you're from Arizona," McCain said, indicating there has never been a president from Arizona. "Arizona might be the only state where mothers don't say you can grow up to be president."

Instead, most of his speech dealt with his ideas and criticisms of America's relationships with other nations. He offered a line of five principles he said American diplomacy should follow:

■ "Seek not substitute for American leadership

CLIF PALMBERG/
COLLEGIAN

in the defense of American interests and values."

McCain said the United States should not become involved in problems only when instructed to do so by other nations.

"The United States is the indispensable nation, because we have proven to be the greatest force for good in human history," he said. "Imagine how different the crises of the last half of this century would have ended had the United States been a minor power."

■ "We must protect our interests to promote our values, and vice versa."

In his lecture, McCain said the values and interests of the United States are one in the same, and both should be defended. He said the Clinton administration has failed to promote American interests in situations such as China effectively.

"When the secretary of state goes to Beijing to publicly decry human rights violations while privately seeming to be intimidated by Chinese objections to a missile defense for Taiwan, she causes the Chinese to dismiss our commitment to either cause," he said.

■ "Force has a role in, but not as a substitute for, diplomacy."

As a prisoner of war in the Vietnam conflict, McCain said war was once reality for him and an experience he would remember the rest of his life. He also said a president should have great reluctance to send troops into conflict.

"Whether their role is peacekeeper or combatant, they are going into harm's way, and some of them won't come home," he said. "If you perceive a threat to our security and our values, that warrants the use of force if necessary — don't forget the 'if necessary' part."

■ "Build coalitions to protect our interests and values. Don't neglect our interests and values to build coalitions."

McCain said he is a strong supporter of NATO and the United Nations, but neither organization should replace American leadership. He also said such organizations will fail without allied backing.

"I don't wish to be an alarmist, but I feel it necessary to observe as we approach the 50th anniversary of NATO that the Atlantic alliance is in pretty bad shape," he said, "despite the good news that Poland, the Czech Republic and Hungary have joined our ranks."

He also cautioned against Europe developing a defense identity separate from NATO and said he thought allies should pay greater attention to American concerns, since the United States bears the greatest share of the mutual defense.

■ "Credibility is a strategic asset."

The conflict in Iraq, McCain said, has been squandered by the Clinton administration because of idle threats and abandoned promises.

"The world's only superpower should never give its word insincerely," he said. "We should never, never make idle threats. These failings ensure that the price we ultimately pay in blood and treasure to defend our security will be greater than if we had honored our commitments from the beginning."

Student Body President Tracey Mann said he thought McCain's speech helped bring the Landon Lecture Series back to life.

"I thought he did a great job of outlining his ideas on foreign policy," Mann said. "The five things he listed sort of let everyone know his policies if he runs for president."

"FORCE HAS A ROLE IN, BUT NOT AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR, DIPLOMACY."

SEN. JOHN MCCAIN, R-ARIZ.

TAX ADVANTAGED SOLUTIONS FROM TIAA-CREF

UNFORTUNATELY, THIS IS WHERE PEOPLE ARE PUTTING TOO MANY RETIREMENT DOLLARS.

Every year, a lot of people make a huge mistake on their taxes. They wind up sending Uncle Sam money they could be saving for retirement.

Fortunately, that's a mistake you can avoid with SRAs—tax-deferred annuities from TIAA-CREF. SRAs not only ease your current tax bite, they offer an easy way to build retirement income—especially for the "extra" that your pension and Social Security benefits may not cover. Because your contributions are made in pretax dollars, you pay less in taxes now. And since earnings on your SRAs are tax deferred, your money works even harder for you.

Today, we offer other before- and after-tax financial solutions, including IRAs and mutual funds. They're backed by the same investment expertise, low expenses, and personal service that have made TIAA-CREF the choice of America's educational and research community.

Why write off the chance for a more rewarding retirement? Stop by your benefits office or call us at 1 800 842-2776 and find out how TIAA-CREF SRAs can help you enjoy happier returns.

Congrats to winners, losers of '99 elections

The Collegian Editorial Board wishes to congratulate Jason Heinrich and Gabe Eckert for their election to the executive branch of student government.

Congratulations also should go out to the rest of the students who will make up the leadership of Student Governing Association, as well as students who fell short of elected office. Every candidate brought up good ideas and voiced solutions for problems.

Hopefully, with the number of students who filed for elections, the voting determined not only who were the best candidates but also which issues were most important.

The trap that candidates often fall into is thinking the elections are the most important part of one's term. Instead, it is the work that is put in after the elections that truly matters to the rest of the students. Thousands of students took the time to vote, and the only way to honor those students is to take an elected position seriously.

Many of the students who will take office officially April 1 will be new to the SGA scene. To those leaders, remember that your actions are just as important as the work done by veteran leaders. Being hesitant or reserved, simply because of a rookie status, does nothing for you or the students who voted for you.

To the seasoned SGA member, it's important to use experience to guide new members into action as quickly as possible. Students look to tenured leaders to improve the governing process continually and be able to abandon methods that have failed in the past.

Finally, the student body at large should not think that voting is the only way to effect change. Students must lobby their ideas to the candidates that were elected.

Elected officials are only as effective as the constituents want them to be.

THE SLIPPERY SLOPE OF ASSISTED SUICIDE

Euthanasia raises moral questions about murder, dying a 'good death'

In the last several years, Dr. Jack Kevorkian has gone on a killing spree. His efforts have brought the moral questions surrounding euthanasia to the forefront of public debate.

The literal meaning of the word

"euthanasia" is "a good death."

However, the way Kevorkian practices it and the way it would be used if legalized are anything but good deaths.

The fine line between euthanasia and murder can be crossed all too easily. Kevorkian crossed that line the first time he assisted a suicide. In June 1990, 54-year-old Janet Adkins, a patient with Alzheimer's disease, died of lethal injection from Kevorkian's first suicide machine while in his van. Kevorkian had never spoken to Adkins when he agreed to assist in her death; he had spoken only to her husband. Dying in the back of a van at the hands of a virtual stranger doesn't sound like a good death.

Since Janet's death, Kevorkian has assisted in 46 more deaths. He has been prosecuted several times for those deaths, but he has yet to be convicted.

Kevorkian earned the nickname Dr. Death long before he ever assisted Janet in her death. As a young pathologist on night rounds, Kevorkian would shine a light into the eyes of dying patients to see if he could determine the precise moment of death.

Further evidence of his dementia is apparent in his artwork. His paintings feature severed heads, blood and dismembered bodies. For him to be the center of such a life-and-death debate is a travesty. His mental state alone can be used as an argument against legalized euthanasia.

However, a greater and more compelling argument against legalized euthanasia is the slippery slope argument. Former Surgeon General C. Everett Koop states in his book, "Let's Talk: an Honest Conversation on Critical Issues," that he is "convinced that in the 1930s the German medical sentiment favoring euthanasia made it easier for the Nazi government to move society along the slippery slope that led to the Holocaust."

He said in his book, "The German euthanasia movement started with defective babies, then reached out to eliminate the insane, then to those suffering from senile dementia, then to patients with advanced tuberculosis, to amputees deemed of no further service to the Reich, to gypsies, to Poles, and finally to Jews. The Holocaust was upon us."

Although America's slope doesn't appear quite as steep, the debate before abortion was legalized proves that a slope certainly exists. When abortion was legalized, opponents of abortion said it wouldn't be long before euthanasia was socially acceptable and then legalized. Proponents of abortion said that would never happen. Unfortunately, physician-assisted suicides have become acceptable, though not yet legal, and we have progressed further down that slippery slope.

The question is: Where is the bottom of that slope? The answer might be found in the Netherlands' system of legalized physician-assisted suicide.

In the current debate, the Dutch system of regulating physician-assisted suicide and euthanasia has served as a model for proposed U.S. laws. In order to be a legal assisted suicide, doctors must adhere to a set of guidelines. According to those guidelines, the request to be assisted in death must be persistent, voluntary and well-considered. Doctors cannot advise patients to seek death. The patient must be in intolerable suffering that cannot be relieved. The doctors must consult patients about all of their options and report the cases of physician-assisted suicide to the government.

The guidelines are a fine idea; however, they aren't always followed. A study published in the Journal of the American Medical Association found that most of the guidelines were not always met. Fifty percent of doctors in the study reported they considered it appropriate to suggest euthanasia to patients. Underreporting is also a serious problem. In 1990, only 18 percent of euthanasia cases were reported to the authorities as required by the Dutch guidelines.

The most frightening finding of the study showed that Dutch patients are being euthanized when they have not given their consent.

Unquestionably, those cases cross the line and can be considered murder. Twenty-five percent of physicians said they had terminated the lives of patients without an explicit request. In one case, a doctor euthanized a breast cancer patient that hadn't given consent because he needed more hospital beds. The doctor said, "It could have taken another week before she died. I just needed this bed."

It appears the Dutch have yet to reach the bottom of their slope. It would be unwise for the United States to legalize euthanasia without determining just how far that slope might extend.

Clinton's steps to change police image based on personal success

If ever there is anyone who knows the importance of good public relations, it is Bill Clinton. I mean, Slick Willy has been around the block more on this subject than any of us want to discuss.

I made a promise to myself that the words that have made this man infamous in the last year would never be used in my column. If you are unaware of the words I am referring to, I'll help you out. One starts with the letter "M." Hint: the name of a character on "Friends." The other starts with a "C" and might be the main export of Cuba, next to major-league baseball players. Finally, the last word begins with an "I" and contains the words "peach" and "mint." If you haven't guessed what the words are yet, then get a hold of me, and I will put a big stamp on your head that says, "I am an idiot." Then I'll tell you.

The man has some serious issues. Americans think he is doing an excellent job, though. You have to admit, if you think about it, who better to get advice on public relations than good old Clinton? He has got the market cornered. The man just went through that letter "I" trial, and his public opinion ratings are almost as high as the Dow Jones Industrial Average has been lately. So, the man must have something going for him in that public-relations department of his.

Well, it turns out Clinton is ready to pass along his knowledge to some guys who need all the good public relations they can get. That's right, our uniformed, badge-wearing pals, the police. Who doesn't need an image face-lift more than our friends in blue? What are the first words you think of when you think of the word "police"? Chances are they don't involve too many nice words like hard working, caring or honest. That's not to mean I am saying there are not police officers who exhibit those qualities. It's just that it isn't the normal public's opinion of the "smokies." If the image has anything to do with a certain bakery item filled with a certain jelly substance, then these guys really do need some help (and maybe the health guru, Clinton, isn't the one to turn to on that subject).

These guys need some serious public-opinion adjustment. To the rescue comes the man. Clinton is proposing $40 million to train police officers in how to handle confrontations with minorities better and try to recruit more minorities for the police force. Plus, he wants to set up a program of police academies throughout the nation to acquaint citizens with law enforcement.

I have no doubt these police academies will be a lot like those portrayed from those wonderful movies that made Bobcat Goldthwait famous. Put together a bunch of people from the community with Hightower and the gang, and a newfound respect is found for the force.

OK, it might not be that simple. I think it is a good step, though. Think what you want about Slick Willy, but there aren't too many negatives I can think to say about this idea. The recent misconducts are just adding to minorities' list of not-too-positive opinions about the police. Clinton's plan is looking to try to change that.

For some reason, I just find it humorous that Clinton is the one in charge of this opinion face-lift — humorous in the fact that I hadn't thought of it before.

If this does work, and Clinton can change the overall public persona of police officers from coffee-shop dwellers who don't seem to care about minorities to that of more caring and trustworthy officers who know justice is blind. Think of the implications.

Writers of history books wonder what will become of Bill when his term is over. Where does this storied guy go next? If he pulls this off, the man is going to get a job in a public-relations firm, and I am not talking about some entry-level position. I am talking about head-of-the-board stuff here.

The man would have some sort of magic power. With powers like that, he could change many of our long-held beliefs and perceptions. Who wouldn't want this guy to represent them?

Lawyers are going to be all over him trying to get him to change their appearance. He could make us think that soccer is a manly sport, ozone isn't that important and people actually enjoy Barbra Streisand. Clinton could become a rich man because he knows that Sprite is wrong. Image is everything.

I don't think students should be allowed to hang signs on trees using string anymore, because it would be really easy for a bird or a squirrel to get tangled up in that and get hurt or even die.

I wish the students would quit thinking spring break begins on Wednesday, Thursday or Friday. Teachers can give tests any time they want.

Could you post sometime when they're going to announce the winner of the Neon for the Telefund? I'm really excited to know who won that.

When I was voting last week, I was kind of disappointed to see that there were no booths or anything in the voting area. This guy was looking over my shoulder while I was filling out the voting card. I think there should be booths so people can't see who you're voting for.

This is in regards to running for office just to beef up your résumé. I ran to get involved and be a part of something at K-State. The résumé is just an added bonus. Whoever wrote that article needs to re-evaluate what she's talking about.

I want to thank Tom Clarke. He cured my insomnia with his latest article.

Faith in God is the ultimate solution to loneliness, pain

Editor,

I want to applaud David Levin for having the courage to share honestly with us about the struggles in his life. I'm sure his columns are offering support and encouragement to other students who also are facing similar difficulties. His last column on loneliness especially caught my attention. I think this is something that everyone has to go through at one time or another.

But I was saddened to see that he seems to regard God as someone we invented to soothe our loneliness, and he feels the love of God either is not real or is not for him. He is missing out on the only ultimate solution to the loneliness and despair that this world offers.

Levin is right — we do need others. I can identify with some of what Levin describes, but the difference in my life is that I know that God always has been there for me. I have felt his presence, experienced his love, assurance and comfort, and seen him work miracles in the lives of those around me.

If the only basis for my faith in God was a need to invent an "imaginary friend," then I would be an atheist. I am too much of a logical, thinking-type person to go for that. But I know God personally, and I know that his love is real.

Sometimes God uses pain and difficulty to get our attention and draw us to himself. He can make something beautiful out of the ugliest of situations. It is my sincere hope that Levin finds the hope, purpose and companionship he is seeking in the only place they can be found, a personal relationship with Jesus Christ.

Campus offices need noon hours to benefit students

Editor,

We would like to address a problem concerning the hours of the campus offices. For those students with jobs and a full schedule of classes, the best time to visit an office or run errands is during the noon hour. The problem is that all of the college offices are closed during the noon hour.

Our proposal is this: Keep someone in all of the college offices over the noon hour by rotating lunch breaks of the employees. One person can go from 11 a.m. to noon, and then the next one can go from noon to 1 p.m. This way, all the students needing a copy of their schedule or some pamphlets from the Copy Center will be able to obtain them. Like most businesses, the offices should have someone there to keep the office available to students who don't have any other time.

By making the offices available over the lunch hour, the university would increase its ability to provide for its students greatly.

Amendment keeps Washburn separate

By LEW FERGUSON
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — Washburn got its wish. The Senate Education Committee agreed Monday not to put Topeka's municipal university under the same sub-group as state universities in a reconstituted Kansas Board of Regents.

The committee adopted an amendment to put Washburn under a sub-board called the Board for Higher Education Coordination rather than under the Board for Public Universities, where the six state universities would be placed.

Washburn, which is not part of the state system, still would be governed by its own board of regents, but the new coordination sub-board would oversee its programs and courses. The full board of regents would review its budget, as it does now.

Chairwoman Barbara Lawrence said she plans to have the committee continue discussing the issue today and hopes to have its endorsement by the end of that meeting.

Among other unresolved issues: ■ Whether the Aug. 1, 1999, starting date in the bill is too soon to get a new board up and running.

■ Whether the three sub-boards should continue indefinitely or be phased out and replaced by committees that would be created by the new board of regents. ■ Whether to provide some mechanism for keeping present members of the board of regents to ensure continuity of programs now being developed.

■ Whether to have the board chairperson appointed by the governor or elected by the board, and whether the chairperson of the coordination board should be designated as regents' chairperson to provide a buffer between university and community college interests.

■ How to structure a system to reward schools financially for meeting certain "core performance indicators" that the board would develop as goals for each institution.

The bill would abolish the current nine-member board of regents and reconstitute it with the same number of members under the same name, and it would divide the board into three sub-boards with three members on each. One would run the universities, one would run community colleges and vocational-technical schools, and one would coordinate all programs and resolve conflicts among schools.

To reward good performance, goals would be set for each institution by 2001. Institutions that met their goals would receive a financial bonus in the 2003 fiscal year.

Sen. Dave Kerr, R-Hutchinson, leading proponent of the awards system, said he envisions appropriating about $10 million a year to reward schools that meet their performance goals.

This is the last event scheduled for Asian-American Awareness Month.

K-State Web site explains Y2K dilemma

By SARAH BAHARI
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The year 2000 is approaching, and computer users are preparing their computers for the turn of the century. K-State has developed a World Wide Web site to help people understand and deal with the potential problems related to the new year.

The 2000 phenomenon, known as Y2K, stems from the fact that some computers are not programmed to understand the year 2000. Instead, they will revert back 100 years.

This problem could affect several aspects of business and possibly affect personal computer usage, said Ann Kosch, Y2K technical adviser and creator of the Web site.

"Asking why we need a Web site is just like asking, 'Will there be any problems in the year 2000?'" she said. "Technology and dates are all over the place."

The Web site, which is listed in the K-State home page under information technology, explains why computers might not function properly in the new year. It contains Y2K screen savers, cartoons and has a journal section where people can ask about computer problems or share their own solutions to common dilemmas.

John Streeter, director of the Office of Information Systems, said K-State is doing what it can to combat the problem.

"We're modifying all major application systems and working on better maintenance," he said. "Right now we are cautiously optimistic about the situation."

Common word processing programs, such as Microsoft Word, should work flawlessly, with the only glitch being the program might not know the right date, Streeter said.

"A person needs to be aware if they use dates or not," Kosch said. "If someone doesn't need the dates at all, this shouldn't be a concern."

As far as university programming goes, the level of concern is not high, Streeter said. Items like enrollment or e-mail mail should not present any large problems. People should be more concerned with checking their personal computers for any possible glitches, Streeter said.

Although Kosch said she does not know the exact number of visitors to the Web site, she projects it to be low. One reason for the low number is people could be putting off worrying about their computers until the new year.

"People shouldn't wait to check their computers. The new year will be here soon," Kosch said. "People need to know if their computers need to be forced to roll over to the new date or if their computers will work on their own. They also need to check their software to make sure it will work. Our Web site provides the needed information to do this."

K-State golf ties for 14th

■ Freshman's putt keeps Cats from finishing last.

By JOSHUA KINDER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Freshman Bryan Milberger sank a 6-foot putt in the final round to give the K-State men's golf team a tie for 14th place (300-310-310 — 920) with Big 12 Conference foe Missouri to avoid finishing alone in last place at the Louisiana Classic in Lafayette, La., in the tournament March 8 and 9.

K-State head coach Tim Norris said he is pleased with the true-freshman's performance so far this season, as well as the play of freshman Scott McNeely, who finished tied for 76th with 82-78-79 — 239.

"I'm really encouraged with his play so far," Norris said about Milberger. "It's good for both Scott and Bryan to get in the tough competition right now. Both need to come out this spring and continue to learn more. The experience they're gaining is invaluable to them. There is a big difference between high school and the Division I college level. "I'm never going to come out and tell a freshman that they have to red-shirt," Norris said. "We want them to jump in and battle for a team spot like they have."

Senior Brant Benninga posted the Cats' top score (74-77-76 — 227) after he shot 76 on the last day of competition to finish in 39th place, after finishing the first day's action in the 43rd position. Milberger was second on the team as he finished in a tie for 43rd place.

Junior Mark Sears, who had a strong fall and won the Wildcat Invitational Tournament at the Manhattan Country Club, tied for 49th after posting 74-77-78 for a total of 229.

Norris said Sears' play has improved a lot during last year, and it showed in the fall season. Norris now hopes he can continue where he left off.

"He improved a lot over last year and had a great fall season for us," Norris said. "His game is starting to come around. He'll help us out as the spring goes on."

In order for the Cats to get to the top of the field, Norris said he needs to get everyone on the same page at the same time.

"It's the simple fact that it comes down to getting everyone playing well at the same time," Norris said. "We need to get two or three players to finish in the top third of the tournaments to get the team finishes we want to have."

Junior Brian Racette rounded out the rest of the Wildcat scorers, and he posted 79-78-83 — 240 to finish 75th overall.

K-State's next action is March 22 and 23 at the Stevinson Ranch Invitational in Turlock, Calif.

split SERIES

Cats win first game but struggle in 12-2 loss against 9th-ranked Texas

After gaining its first Big 12 Conference victory of the season Saturday afternoon, the K-State baseball team couldn't secure the series with a victory Sunday, falling to No. 9 Texas, 12-2.

Wildcats starter Brett Reid surrendered five runs in the first inning to the Longhorns, as Texas starter D.J. Jones improved to 5-1 on the season by pitching his fourth complete game this year. Reid, 1-1, left the game in the second inning.

The weekend series in Austin started out well enough for K-State, with a doubleheader split Saturday. The Cats bounced back from an 8-1 loss in the opening game to secure an 8-4 victory in the nightcap.

Battling to a 3-3 standoff through seven innings, K-State locked up the victory with a five-run eighth inning. After one run was plated on a Quinn Cravens sacrifice groundout, Andy Silva knocked in two more with a double. Silva finished the afternoon two for three with a walk and two RBIs.

Starting pitcher Jason Wells pitched a career-high 8 2/3 innings for K-State, improving his record to 2-1 on the year.

In the opener, Derek Anderson surrendered a pair of runs in the bottom of the seventh to blow open a close game. Texas picked up four more runs in the eighth off reliever Brandon Peck to take the first game of the series, 8-1. Anderson dropped to 2-4 overall.

K-State's only offense was provided by Kasey Weishaar, who sustained an 11-game hitting streak with a two for four performance, including his third home run of the season. Weishaar's hitting streak came to an end in the second game with a zero for three performance.

Despite the loss, K-State pitching coach Mike Hensley said both starting pitchers gave solid efforts.

"I was real proud of those guys," Hensley said. "Neither one of them had their best stuff today — Anderson struggled with his location, and Wells didn't have his best stuff — but they both battled real hard. Anderson had problems with his control for the first time this year, and that led to a high pitch count that hurt him late, and Wells didn't have his best stuff. But they both went out there and fought hard."

Now 9-11 overall and 1-5 in the Big 12, the Cats return to action Friday afternoon against Oklahoma at Phil Welch Stadium in St. Joseph, Mo. K-State's next three home series will be played in St. Joseph because of renovations to Frank Myers Field.

Ailing tennis team falters in weekend matches against conference foes

By SETH TROTTER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State tennis team went to Oklahoma for matches this weekend with only four healthy players. The Wildcats lost to 45th-ranked Oklahoma, 7-2, Saturday in Norman, Okla., and then lost to Oklahoma State, 8-1, Sunday in Stillwater.

K-State fell to 3-9 overall and 1-2 in the Big 12 Conference.

Sophomores Martina Pospisilova and Eva Novotna could not compete because of the flu, while freshman Kathy Chuda also could not make the trip because of back spasms.

Despite the lack of a full squad, head coach Steve Bietau said he still was pleased with the weekend.

"I feel good with how we played this weekend," Bietau said.

Sophomore Anna Pampoulova won both of her singles matches this weekend while playing No. 1 singles. Against Oklahoma, she defeated 65th-ranked Viviana Mrazcova, 6-3, 0-6, 6-4. Pampoulova beat Maria Galoustova of Oklahoma State, 4-6, 6-4, 7-6 (5).

Bietau said he was impressed with how Pampoulova played.

"Looking at the singles matches, this has to be the most successful weekend she has had in her career here," he said. "Mentally she did a better job. She kept her concentration longer than she has in the past."

Her play may have solidified her position at No. 1 singles.

"A few weeks ago, I was feeling like we didn't have a clear No. 1," Bietau said. "I was thinking that we would have to move people around there. We moved Martina to No. 2 and Anna to No. 1, and that was going OK, but it wasn't going great."

Freshman Alena Jecminkova, who has been playing at No. 4, was bumped up to No. 2 because of the many absences. She lost, 7-6 (5), 6-4, to Raluca Gheorghe of Oklahoma and 6-3, 7-5 to Dominika Olszewska of Oklahoma State.

Even though she lost both matches, Bietau said it was a good experience for her.

"She did most of the things that we thought she could do this week," he said. "She also put herself in a position to potential win matches against good players."

The other singles matches against Oklahoma were all losses for the Wildcats. Sophomore Natalia Farmer lost to Kristin Guilford, 6-2, 6-3, and freshman Vesseline Jeliaskova was defeated, 6-1, 6-3. The other two singles matches were forfeited.

In doubles against OU, Pampoulova and Jecminkova won against Mrazcova

Sweet 16 full of unfamiliar names, some familiar faces, lots of unpredictability

CRANE

Now that the NCAA men's field is narrowed to 16 teams and almost every bracket in your pool is thoroughly screwed up, there are some interesting teams and match ups left in the mix.

Before we go so far as to pick winners, losers and the like, I have two short complaints. I hate these names: Szczesbiak and Krzyzewski. Who in their right mind would leave their names in this unpronounceable state instead of using their legal right to change them to something a little more phonetic?

Wally Szczesbiak — phonetically, Zer-BEE-ack — a.k.a. Wally. No one could look at this guy's name and pronounce it correctly if they had never heard it before. This guy is the best basketball player you've never heard of. He's Miami, Ohio's top player and a future top-10 NBA pick. So far, he has scored 67 of his team's 124 points in the tournament. And no one can say his name. I've heard more versions of his name than I have of Bill Clinton's testimony. Wally, you're a great player, but don't you get tired of reporters spitting in your face trying to stutter out your confusing name? What about your college having to order smaller letters just so your name can fit on your back? How about just calling yourself Wally, like Prince? You might have some marketing opportunities there. (Air Wally?)

Since we're playing the name game, I might as well throw another one in there that more people know but probably can't spell. Mike Krzyzewski, Duke's head coach. Throw his name in the National Spelling Bee, and watch some little kids walk off the stage in tears. For those of you still wondering about his name, it's Shoo-SHEF-ski. How does Mike Schuchefskel look? Looks pronounceable to me. How about Mike Duke?

Anyway, enough of the fun and games. On with the fun.

In the South, the matchups are (1) Auburn/(4) Ohio State and perhaps the most interesting matchup of the bracket right now, (3) St. John's/(2) Maryland.

I believe high-flying Auburn will soar over Ohio State. Look for Auburn's Chris Porter to blow up all over the Buckeyes. Porter, who has the most amazing dunk of the season, replayed over and over on ESPN, has been relatively quiet so far. I think he's due for a big game.

As for the St. John's/Maryland contest, St. John's is playing as good as anyone right now, but I don't think its guard play is tough enough to hold Steve Francis and the Terrapins. St. John's took Duke into overtime earlier this season but came up short. This will be the best game of the Sweet 16.

In the West, we have (1) Connecticut facing (5) Iowa. Yawn. Not much here.

UConn will roll into the Elite Eight.

The other match up in the West is (6) Florida against (10) Gonzaga. Upset.

Upset. Upset. I think Gonzaga is playing great basketball now, but even if it falters, I will not regret picking it.

In the East, there is 12th-seed

Southwest Missouri State facing top-seeded Duke. I don't want to predict a Duke win, but I have to. Duke is too tough to be scared of a hot Missouri-Valley team.

Southwest Missouri had a great run, and maybe if the football program here at K-State would loan basketball some cash, we could get Southwest Missouri coach

Steve Alford to come here.

The other match up in the East is (6)

Temple and (10) Purdue. This is the part of the bracket that threw everyone off.

OK, maybe me at least. I am going with Temple on this one, but if they lose, I'll deny picking it.

Finally in the Midwest, there is (1) Michigan State against the lowest seed left, (13) Oklahoma. I am still in disbelief that Oklahoma is left in the mix. I think its little run is done. Hopefully. We just can't have any Okies in this late when neither one of our Kansas teams are left.

The final game is (3) Kentucky and (10) Miami, Ohio, where, once again, our hero Wally is going to rip the Wildcats to shreds. I am rooting for Miami, but I'm tired of writing Ohio and Szczesbiak or Zerbeeack and Krzyzewski or Schuchefskel ... and I have learned one other thing about March Madness. I hate Dick Vitale, but that's another column.

It was a victory because they did what they set out to do, Prieto said. "We didn't change," he said. "We started out by believing in ourselves. We didn't have to sell out."

Bainter, student body vice presidential candidate, said he agreed.

"We said right from the beginning, we're going to do what candidates really need to do — it's all from the heart," he said.

In the general elections, Prieto and Bainter had 27.7 percent of the votes, and in the runoff elections they had just less than 48 percent of the vote.

Prieto said their increased votes were due to their grassroots effort.

"We talked to a guy for 15 minutes, and he decided to vote," he said.

Listening and talking to students helped increase the numbers, Bainter said.

"People obviously saw that we were genuine," he said. "That's probably why our numbers grew."

Prieto and Bainter said they're still going to push for their issues.

"We can still be a voice for the students," Bainter said. "If the system is truly set up for the students, it shouldn't matter if we win or not."

It just will be more difficult to get their issues accomplished, he said. Prieto said he hopes Heinrich and Eckert support their issues.

"With that leadership capacity, they do have the ability to get them across," he said.

Aaron Shea, student body vice presidential candidate, said he was disappointed with the students.

"I think the students of K-State made a mistake," he said. "They didn't really get out and try to learn about the candidates."

Rick Wooten, Shea's running mate, said he wished the elections were about the issues, not about whose name is on a sticker.

"Leo had pamphlets, but had issues on the back of those," he said. "I didn't see any issues on the stickers."

The elections reminded Wooten of movie "Indiana Jones and the Last Crusade," he said.

In the movie, he said, Jones, a woman and another man were in a chamber with a knight, and they had to choose a cup that would bring them eternal youth. The other man chose the most flashy cup, which was wrong, and he perished.

Jones chose the simple wooden cup that was made by the son of a carpenter, and it was the right choice.

"That's what I think of this election," Wooten said. "A lot of people just voted because they saw something that was flashy."

Shea said sometimes that doesn't count in the end.

"Flashy isn't always the right choice," he said.

Carlos Contreras, one of Bainter and Prieto's supporters, said he was still happy despite the loss.

"I'm happy because I know what we've done is probably a change in itself, a change for K-State," he said.

Contreras said he was pleased because they helped increase voter turnout. He said they got students to vote who didn't know they could.

Prieto and Bainter said they didn't think their violation hearings hurt them.

"If someone is not going to vote for us because our poster was hung in the wrong spot and we didn't know about it, they weren't looking at the issues, probably," Bainter said.

Despite everything, Prieto said he and Bainter were happy.

"We had fun," he said. "That's what it's all about. We enjoyed ourselves."

KOSOVO

"The Yugoslav authorities have their backs to the wall. It's up to them to choose now," he said. "Time is pressing."

Sources close to the Serb delegation have indicated they might try to stall the talks by proposing a three month ceasefire in Kosovo or the deployment of unarmed, non-NATO, peacekeeping troops — something the West is sure to reject.

The international community has insisted that the military and political components are inseparable.

The agreement would amount to self-rule for the ethnic Albanians in Kosovo. It would require the rebel Kosovo Liberation Army to disarm — something the rebels have found hard to accept.

and Angela Stroup, 8-5. Farmer and Jelaskova lost to Gheorghe and Guilford, 8-3. One doubles match was forfeited.

Against OSU, Farmer lost, 6-2, 6-0, to Martina Hautova and Jelaskova was defeated by Marketa Chmelova, 6-0, 6-2. Again, the last two singles matches had to be forfeited.

The Cats did not pick up any doubles victories against Oklahoma State. Pampoulova and Jecminkova lost to Galoustova and Ashleigh Dolman, 8-3. Farmer and Jelaskova were defeated, 8-6, against Hautova and Chmelova. A doubles match was also forfeited.

The Wildcats stay on the road as they travel to Baylor on Saturday. During spring break, the Cats will leave the conference to play Fresno State and Pepperdine.

Phil Stein, junior in political science, said. "We're all just worn out."

Stein said both candidates ran a good campaign.

"Gabe and Jason are really good role models," Stein said. "Chris and Leo are both phenomenal guys, but personally, I felt like Jason and Gabe were the best people for the job."

Heinrich and Eckert's parents came to Manhattan to join the supporters.

"We're very proud of them," Rita Eckert, Eckert's mother, said. "Gabe's always been very self-motivated. He's always liked leadership positions."

Heinrich's parents said Heinrich also has been self-motivated and has tried to gain as much experience as possible. They said they are glad Heinrich and Eckert had so many great supporters.

"I know he's had a great team," Dixie Heinrich, Heinrich's mother, said. "It's great to have so many people who are so serious about it."

Eckert's father said he felt K-State students made the right choice.

"I think they've got a lot of intelligent voters at K-State," Jerry Eckert said.

Campaign members said they worked very hard Sunday night to get people to vote for Heinrich and Eckert at the polls Monday.

Eckert said it was a little bit hard for everyone to be motivated because of the big lead they had over Prieto and Bainter after last week's general election results, but everyone pitched in and got the needed support.

He said everyone deserves to relax during spring break.

"It'll be nice to get back to life as normal," Eckert said.

Elijah Keever, freshman in pre-law, brought a box of cigars to pass around after the announcement of the win. He said he enjoyed campaigning because Heinrich and Eckert are a great team.

"They bring together a good combination of campus leadership as well as student government experience and have a genuine interest in helping K-State students and people in general," he said.

Heinrich said their supporters were the reason for their success.

"We've just been really lucky for knowing these people," Heinrich said. "There's no way anyone can do this by themselves."

Bill would commit U.S. to missile-defense system

By TOM RAUM
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Sixteen years after President Reagan called for a national missile defense shield, both houses of Congress are moving toward approval this week of legislation to commit the United States to such a system.

Reports of espionage by China at a U.S. nuclear weapons plant and recent missile tests by North Korea and Iran are helping to build bipartisan support for the measure, though the Clinton administration has threatened a veto.

"These recent events have answered the question about the threat," Sen. Thad Cochran, R-Miss., told the Senate as it opened debate on Monday.

The Senate could vote on the overall bill as early as Tuesday. The House is taking up its version on Thursday, after a rare closed-door session to receive classified information on missile threats facing the United States.

Support in the Senate has grown over the past year for the measure by Cochran and Sen. Daniel Inouye, D-Hawaii. It would commit the United States to field a national missile defense system, which would be effective against a limited missile attack as soon as technologically possible.

After blocking missile defense legislation for years, Democrats now are trying to keep the issue from becoming a campaign liability in 2000. Sen. Carl Levin of Michigan, the senior Democrat on the Armed Services Committee, said he had given up trying to block a vote.

Instead, Levin said he will work for passage of substitute legislation designed to give the Clinton administration more flexibility while seeking to work with Russia on modifications to the 1972 Anti-Ballistic Missile Treaty.

Russian officials said the Cochran-Inouye bill violates the ABM treaty's restrictions on anti-ballistic missile defense systems. "I'm hopeful we can modify this language so we don't threaten to rip up this treaty," Levin said in an interview.

In remarks to the Senate on Monday, Levin said the bill was "a headlong rush to deployment." He said, "I have not heard of any of our senior military leaders who support this legislation."

National Security Adviser Sandy Berger has said he will recommend a veto if the legislation passes in its present form.

President Clinton proposed $6.6 billion for a missile defense system over the next five years in the budget he submitted last month.

Cuomo lauds concerned journalism

By CHRISTINE ROEGER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Human-rights activists and local journalists are often the only force standing between ordinary people and the misuse of power by the state, said Kerry Kennedy Cuomo, who spoke as part of the Dorothy L. Thompson Civil Rights Lecture Series in McCain Auditorium on Monday night.

Nearly 200 people attended the lecture on human rights and the media.

"The press is under attack," Cuomo said. "Homicide is now the leading cause of job-related injury in the profession worldwide."

She urged journalists to use their power to help other journalists in danger in their fight for social justice and human rights.

"For many journalists, the only hope for victory and ultimately survival is exposure," Cuomo said.

She criticized the idea that journalists are at the sidelines trying to maintain their objectivity at all costs.

"The very best journalists pursue concerned journalism," Cuomo said. "You have to be involved. Great journalism demands an angle."

In China, the government hires photographers to report demonstrators so they can be arrested later, she said.

Cuomo is radio correspondent who interviews human-rights leaders for Voice of America. She also reported on human rights and the environment for the TV program "Network Earth."

Since 1981, when she first had an internship at Amnesty International, Cuomo has focused her work on justice and human rights. She documented abuses committed by immigration officials to refugees from El Salvador.

She is married to Andrew Cuomo, secretary of Housing and Urban Development and son of former New York Gov. Mario Cuomo. She was 8 years old when her father Robert F. Kennedy was murdered.

Cuomo founded the Robert F. Kennedy Memorial Center for Human Rights, a nonprofit organization that addresses violations against the U.N. Declaration of Human Rights. Until last year, she was executive director of the organization, which uncovered and publicized human rights abuses and supported activists at risk.

Cuomo stressed the importance of reporting human-rights violations.

"When there is no videotape, it did not happen," she said.

Cuomo also spoke about the pain journalists endure at the hands of governments and armies.

"Journalists are now under fire more than any time in the past," Cuomo said.

Cuomo said that when war broke out in the former Yugoslavia, the first group targeted was not Croats, Serbs or Muslims. She said the first group targeted was the press. She said 46 journalists were killed in that area.

Last year 129 journalists were imprisoned worldwide, including 29 in jail in Turkey. Cuomo said 36 journalists were killed, with at least 26 of those due to political motivation.

"Last year Algeria remained the most dangerous place in the world for journalists," Cuomo said.

The Armed Islamic group, a terrorist organization fighting to overthrow the Algerian government, is responsible for the deaths of 59 journalists since the civil war started in 1992, she said.

Cuomo mentioned an Armed Islamic group press release that said "those who fight with the pen should die by the sword."

She said there are many journalists in the world who fight for noble goals.

"You need not to change the world, but you can do what you must in your own community to make a difference," she said.

Search continues for survivors of train wreck

National Transportation Safety Board investigating cause of Amtrak accident

By JAMES WEBB
ASSOCIATED PRESS WRITER

BOURBONNAIS, Ill. — Rescue crews used cranes Tuesday to move mangled, smoldering pieces of metal as they searched for victims of the nation's worst train wreck since 1993 — a fiery collision with a truck loaded with steel bars. At least 14 people were killed and 119 injured.

Authorities said the truck driver, 58-year-old John R. Stokes, was driving on a probationary license after receiving three speeding tickets within a year. He suffered only minor injuries.

As many as 216 people were aboard Amtrak's City of New Orleans when it hit the tractor-trailer Monday night at a rural crossing near a steel mill 50 miles south of Chicago. Four to six people were missing and feared dead in the wreckage.

"We need to make sure there are no survivors, and if that means taking the wreckage apart part by part, that's what we'll do," Bourbonnais fire chief Mike Harshbarger said.

The collision left the train's two engines and leading cars scattered like burned and broken toys over a quarter-mile. One engine punched through a car behind it, and the crash sparked a fire that burned for more than five hours.

All of the dead were found in a double-deck sleeping car that was three cars behind the engines of the 14-car train. Many passengers were settling in for the night when the train slammed into the truck shortly after 9:30 p.m.

"All of the sudden everything just started crashing and catching on fire and people hollering and running," said Blanche Jones, a passenger from Memphis, Tenn.

"We couldn't get out, couldn't find a way out. That was the most devastating thing of all. By the grace of God, I just went down a stairway and found a way to get out and let everybody know how to get out."

Amtrak president George Warrington visited the scene in the afternoon, and in Washington, D.C., President Clinton offered his thoughts and prayers to the victims and pledged to do whatever he could to help them and their families.

The crossing was protected by gates and lights that appear to have been functioning at the time of the crash, said David Farrell, a spokesman for the Illinois Commerce Commission.

Stokes, the driver of the truck, said he didn't see the train as he approached the tracks and that the lights started flashing after he had started driving across, said Cy Gura, a safety engineer with the National Transportation Safety Board. Stokes said he saw the train coming and tried to get out of the way.

Gura described Stokes as "very sad and upset. He felt he did whatever he thought he could do to clear the train track, but he didn't do it."

Trains are allowed to travel up to 79 mph on the line, but NTSB investigators said they didn't know how fast the City of New Orleans was going.

Farrell said the crossing has a relatively good safety record, with three deaths in the last 35 years — in 1964, 1968 and 1988. He said about 40 trains and 1,800 vehicles a day use the crossing.

Sensors turn on the lights and bells 26 seconds before a train reaches the crossing, and five seconds later the gates come down, Farrell said.

Mike Stead, head of rail safety at the ICC, said the gates were intact, and authorities have not been able to verify where the truck was at the time of impact or when the gates were lowered.

The worst accident in Amtrak's 28-year history happened on Sept. 22, 1993. Forty-two passengers and five crew members died when the Sunset Limited went off a bridge into a bayou near Mobile, Ala. The bridge had been damaged minutes earlier when it was hit by a towboat.

The most recent Amtrak crash killed 16 people in January 1987 in Maryland. The City of New Orleans runs almost the same route between Chicago and New Orleans as was used by the original Illinois Central train with that name.

Illinois Central also ran a second train, the Panama Limited, which was considered more luxurious, so Amtrak retained that name when it took over passenger rail service in 1971.

About 10 years later, though, owing to the popularity of the song "City of New Orleans," Amtrak resurrected the name to City of New Orleans. The song was written by a Chicago folksinger, Steve Goodman, and was a hit for Arlo Guthrie.

Train depot to get funding for repairs

By SCOTT ALDIS-WILSON
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Buildings, bonds and bids occupied the Manhattan City Commission for more than two hours Tuesday night in a regular legislative session.

One item that passed 5-0 amended the agreement with the Heritage Trust Fund to address what will be fixed on the historic Union Pacific Depot, south of the Manhattan Town Center.

While the HTF and city contributions will remain at $59,920 and $14,980 respectively, an architectural report started last fall has shown more of the money will need to be spent on the foundation, leaving less for the external restoration, Karen Davis, director of community development, said.

"The original scope was more of a guess on our part. The foundation stabilization turned out to be more detailed than we thought," Davis said.

As a result, repairs including the exterior wood and roof system of the depot were removed from the plan, and a system to remove water from the building will be added. Davis said the infrastructure needed to be preserved before exterior changes could be made.

"I think this is going to go a long way towards the health of the building, but you won't be able to see it," she said.

In other business, Manhattan Regional Airport Director Ken Black and Richard Hayter, chairman of the Airport Advisory Committee, presented a plan to commissioners to allocate existing hangars at the airport uniformly.

The airport staff has been plagued for years with inconsistency in leasing practices for airport hangars. Hayter said applicants for city-owned hangar leases generally must be either the aircraft owner or a documented lease holder and then are put into one of three groups.

Lease applicants are separated into three groups according to the location of their business or residence. Top priority is given to applicants who live or work within Manhattan, followed by people who have homes and businesses within the state, and lastly to those based outside the state. Other provisions of the agreement include a $150 refundable deposit to get on the list and a minimum response time to keep a given place on the list.

The plan, passed unanimously by the commission, is preparing for when additional hangars in the area revert to city ownership in 2001 and 2002, as well as plans for new hangar construction within the year, Black said.

The plan is the first uniform set of rules for the city-owned hangars and hopefully will attract more plane owners, Black said.

"It will certainly go a long way towards creating a level of trust. This will set the record straight. One thing you never know is how many aircraft you could accommodate if you made them available," he said.

Anderson to be done in 2000

Construction of Anderson Avenue is ahead of schedule, according to officials at the city of Manhattan Public Works Department. The $7 million project is expected to be completed in early summer 2000.

Originally scheduled to begin in late February, construction began a month ahead of schedule due to unseasonably warm weather this winter. The updating of the road's sewer system, along with the construction of a retaining wall on the south side of Nichols Hall, began during the third week of January, the first of the project's six phases.

Jerry Petty, director of public works, said the project's first phase would continue westward for the next few months as Bayer Construction Co. Inc. continues to work from 14th Street to Harris Street.

Neil Horton, vice president of Bayer Construction, said the south side of campus would remain congested throughout the spring and summer semesters as his crew continues to replace sewer culverts and put up temporary traffic signals along the avenue's corridor. Horton

NCAA refused stay on eligibility guidelines

By GENARO C. ARMAS
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

PHILADELPHIA — The NCAA has entered the "great unknown" after a judge refused to grant it more time to devise freshman eligibility guidelines.

NCAA president Cedric W. Dempsey said the organization is now in a wait-and-see mode after U.S. District Court Judge Ronald Buckwalter declined to issue a stay on Tuesday. A stay could have delayed enforcement of Buckwalter's court order striking down Proposition 16, which mandated that freshmen attain a minimum standardized test score to play in Division I.

The NCAA said that without more time to develop new requirements, there would be chaos among the 302 Division I schools, which would suddenly be without a critical recruiting guideline.

"The NCAA's concern continues to be the welfare and protection of student athletes and the effect this ruling has on the preparedness of freshmen for academics and athletics as they enter Division I institutions," Dempsey said. "With the court's denial of our request for a stay, our membership is left with many unknowns about how to address eligibility standards."

Dempsey also said the ruling could affect teams participating in the current men's and women's basketball tournaments. The NCAA now plans to seek a stay from the 3rd Circuit of the U.S. Court of Appeals; it also plans to appeal the original ruling.

In an eight-page opinion, Buckwalter wrote he did not believe the NCAA would suffer irreparable harm.

"After almost 100 years of administering intercollegiate athletics, the establishment of any prospective initial eligibility rule and the policing of its own members is a task the NCAA is more than well-equipped to handle," Buckwalter wrote. "By contrast, the named plaintiffs and other similarly situated student athletes would incur substantial injury should a stay be issued."

Lawyers for the four black athletes who filed the suit said the NCAA should adopt a nondiscriminatory eligibility policy rather than fighting the court's decision.

"What the NCAA is doing is trying to protect them from themselves," said Andre Dennis, lead lawyer for the plaintiffs. "It's time for the NCAA to develop a nondiscriminatory policy."

The plaintiffs in the case have since graduated or are no longer freshmen in college. They claimed they were denied NCAA scholarships or sports eligibility because they did not meet the minimum test score.

K-State graduate founds aid organization

Parents created charity to honor daughter's life, help deaf, blind children.

By JINA HIPPE
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

An organization that helps deaf and blind children around the world was started by a K-State graduate.

Shari Willis, president and co-founder of Katlyn's Hope Inc., and her husband, Jeff, began the organization, which is based in Wellington, Kan., in honor of their daughter, Katlyn.

Katlyn was born with microphthalmia, a condition that causes blindness and moderate hearing loss. Katlyn died from a respiratory virus before she turned 1 year old. Willis said she had told her daughter before she died she wasn't going to let her life go unnoticed.

"Right before Katlyn died, I told her that her life would be continued," Willis said. "I wanted her life to make a difference."

Willis said she and her husband decided to give the money from Katlyn's funeral to an organization that helped deaf and blind children.

"We found that there wasn't really an organization that helped these particular children," Willis said. "I thought maybe this is why all of this came to pass."

Soon after Katlyn's death in February 1996, her parents founded Katlyn's Hope Inc., a non-profit organization that assists in the education of deaf and blind children through financial assistance and support.

"This helped us in healing from losing her, and it continues to," Willis said. "The more that we're able to do for other families that are sharing experiences like ours the better we feel."

Katlyn's Hope has no paid employees. The organization relies solely on the assistance of volunteers to oversee and operate the fund-raising activities.

Julie Woodward, fund-raising chairwoman for Katlyn's Hope, said the organization requires a lot of work.

"Our paying jobs sometimes get in the way of our non-profit jobs," Woodward said. "If anyone tells you it wasn't a lot of work, they would be lying."

Woodward said the hard work pays off. "I've read some of the parents' requests for scholarships and heard about the living hell they go through trying to get just a little bit of help," Woodward said. "I think that all of this hard work is really worth it because they are just little kids, and no one else wants to help them."

Woodward said Katlyn's Hope has three main fund-raisers throughout the year. "We have an auction and Mexican feed held annually in March, a walk-a-thon and a kids' carnival," Woodward said.

Last year, the walk-a-thon, which was at the University of Kansas, raised about $5,000. About 50 people participated in the event, Woodward said.

This year the walk is April 17. Woodward said she would like to see 150 to 200 people involved.

Willis said she is interested in starting a walk-a-thon at K-State.

"We want someone to sponsor us and help us start a walk at K-State," Willis said.

Woodward said they are also interested in planning a golf tournament in Manhattan.

"All of these events require a lot of work," Woodward said. "The more we do, the bigger things get. It takes a lot more time."

Rhonda Lyne, graduate student in grain science, is Willis' cousin and has helped with Katlyn's Hope since it began.

"I began volunteering because of my relationship with Shari," Lyne said. "I've helped out at all the events."

Lyne said meeting the children who benefit from her work is the best part of volunteering.

"It's great to be able to help out and see where the money you helped to earn is going," Lyne said. "I think a lot of people take their life for granted, and through meeting the children, it has helped me to appreciate my life."

Lyne said encourages others to volunteer for Katlyn's Hope.

"There are not a lot of services for deaf-blind children," Lyne said. "It's hard for them to find funding, and Katlyn's Hope is an excellent resource for that."

2 Manhattan men face indecent liberties charges

Two Manhattan men were arrested for a variety of charges Monday night, including aggravated indecent liberties with a child.

Walter S. Grimes IV, and Luke W. Johnston, both of 908 Gardenway, Apt. 12, were free on $7,500 bond each Tuesday.

Grimes was arrested at 6:52 p.m. for aggravated indecent liberties with a child, criminal sodomy, furnishing alcohol to a minor and contributing to a child's misconduct.

Johnston was arrested at 8:15 p.m. for aggravated indecent liberties with a child, furnishing alcohol to a minor and contributing to a child's misconduct.

Riley County Police Department Lieutenant Herb Crosby said he could not give many details about the case, but "the charges pretty much explain what happened."

He said the two men were arrested after the parents of one of the victims discovered what was happening.

Crosby said there were two victims in the case, and the victims were acquaintances of Grimes and Johnston.

County Attorney Bill Kennedy said he expected the men's court date to be in about a week.

He said standard procedure is paper work is submitted to the county attorney's office about five working days after the arrest.

Once the paper work is submitted, he said, the attorney's office could begin preparing a case.

Jones remains incarcerated, court date set for March 22

Richard B. Jones, 711 N. Juliette Ave., Apt. 6, remains incarcerated in the Riley County Jail on drug charges.

Brenda Jordan, assistant Riley

County attorney, said bond has been set at $100,000.

Jones, sophomore in sociology, was arrested March 12 for charges of the sale of marijuana within 1,000 feet of a school, no drug tax stamp and possession of a controlled substance.

He has also been charged with conspiracy to distribute marijuana and unlawful use of a phone facility to arrange a drug sale.

Possible penalties for the charges range from five to 83 months in prison without parole, Jordan said. Jones' next court date is set for March 22.

Jones, who was arrested on Feb. 25 for the second-degree murder of Steven J. Waters, was free on $50,000 bond prior to his arrest on Friday. The preliminary hearing is scheduled for April 8.

Jordan said the murder charges will not affect sentencing in Jones' drug case, but the drug charges are related to the motive behind the murder.

Jones faces a life sentence and 25 years without parole if he is found guilty of second-degree murder.

Jones declined to comment.

Higher-ed bill delayed, should be completed today

TOPEKA — Senate Education Chairwoman Barbara Lawrence missed her self-imposed deadline Tuesday for finishing work on a bill to restructure higher-education governance and coordination in Kansas.

"I've got to get it done Wednesday," Lawrence, R-Wichita, said after the committee bogged down trying to resolve two remaining issues: composition of a reconstituted state Board of Regents and wording of a plan to award financial bonuses to schools that meet improvement goals.

The committee made more than a half-dozen technical amendments to the restructuring bill today, and Lawrence said she hopes it can finish its work on Wednesday.

Senate Majority Leader Tim Emert, R-Independence, a member of the committee, said he wants to debate it in the Senate by next Tuesday.

Under the bill, a new Board of Regents with the same number of members, nine, would be created to manage or coordinate programs of all public post-secondary institutions in Kansas — six universities, 19 community colleges and 11 vocational schools and technical colleges.

16-year-old sentenced for hitting teacher with hammer

WHITE PLAINS, N.Y. — A high school girl got 2 1/2 to seven years in prison Tuesday for bashing her pregnant teacher in the head with a hammer.

Jalisse Salvatto, 16, attacked her social studies teacher Dawn Jawrower in a Yonkers classroom last April, hitting her twice with a carpenter's hammer. The teen-ager told police she was angry because Jawrower had gone to her parents about her poor grades, which caused her to miss the prom.

Jawrower, who suffered a fractured skull, said she has almost fully recovered and her baby, a boy now 3 months old, is fine. She has returned to teaching in another school.

Salvatto pleaded guilty to assault. "I feel really bad for what I've done," she said, weeping. "I felt worse when I found out you were pregnant. If I could take it back I would, in a second. ... I just want you to forgive me."

Jawrower told a judge that her son, Nicolas, is "a constant reminder of what she did to me," and said Salvatto "needs to get help. ... She has a lot of potential, and she needs to find it."

The judge agreed and ordered psychiatric counseling.

Prominent lawyer sentenced to death for killing mistress

WILMINGTON, Del. — Thomas Capano, a wealthy lawyer who moved among Delaware's elite circles, was sentenced to death Tuesday for the murder of his mistress.

Superior Court Judge William Swain Lee had only two options in sentencing Capano: death by injection, as the jury recommended, or life in prison. He called Capano arrogant and ruthless in announcing the sentence.

Capano, 49, a former state prosecutor and political adviser, was convicted in January of murdering Anne Marie Fahey, scheduling secretary to Delaware Gov. Thomas Carper. She disappeared in June 1996.

A member of a wealthy and influential Wilmington family, Capano admitted at trial to dumping Fahey's body in the Atlantic Ocean but said she was accidentally shot by another mistress who found them together.

Capano showed no emotion as the sentence was read and mouthed, "It will be all right" to his mother and brother Joseph as he was being led from the packed courtroom.

Serbian president rejects key parts of peace plan

Amendments proposed by Serbians will limit the independence of Albanians.

By DUSAN STOJANOVIC
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

PARIS — Brushing aside Western pressure and NATO threats, Serbs said Tuesday they won't accept the Kosovo peace plan that rival ethnic Albanians have agreed to sign.

Setting up new obstacles to the proposed deal during the second day of peace talks near the Arc de Triomphe, Serbs were demanding amendments to a U.S.-sponsored plan — significant changes that foreign mediators called unacceptable.

Serbian President Milan Milutinovic said his side refuses the key part of the plan — having NATO troops implement it — and would sign only the political provision "under the precondition" that the mediators "accept all of our complaints."

Milutinovic's comments at the Paris peace talks brought closer the prospect of NATO airstrikes against Serbia. Western nations sponsoring the talks have said the military and political components of the peace plan are inseparable.

Accusing Serb negotiators of backtracking, U.S. State Department spokesman James P. Rubin said "time and patience clearly are running out" and the Serbs must decide "whether they want a peace agreement rather than a catastrophe."

In Kosovo, meanwhile, three villages were reported ablaze as Serb-led government forces pushed ethnic Albanian rebels deeper into a snowy mountain range.

"While we are negotiating in good faith, the Serbs are engaged in police and military activity in Kosovo," said Veton Surroi, a member of the ethnic Albanian delegation at the talks.

The ethnic Albanian leadership agreed to sign onto the peace plan Monday, making good on a pledge they gave mediators Feb. 23 when the first round of the talks recessed at Rambouillet, France.

But in a sign that all ethnic Albanian factions are not united, hard-line rebels in the northern part of Kosovo accused their negotiators in Paris of selling out on the goal of independence.

"We know it is very easy for them to accept a compromise ... because it wasn't their friends who were killed and whose dying wish was for our people to fight until Kosovo is free," said the Podujevo sector commander of the Kosovo Liberation Army.

Diplomats inside the talks, speaking on condition of anonymity, said the Serbs had proposed a list of amendments that would radically limit Kosovo Albanian autonomy.

A Western diplomat said the proposals would significantly change the deal.

The diplomats said if there was no progress soon with the Serbs, the negotiations may end by Friday. The United States and its Western allies then will have to decide about possible military intervention to end the Kosovo bloodshed.

The agreement would give the ethnic Albanian majority in Kosovo wide political autonomy while keeping the province within Serbia's borders.

The plan provides for 28,000 NATO troops, including up to 4,000 Americans, to enforce it — a provision Serb-led Yugoslavia said it will not accept.

"We reject foreign troops," Milutinovic said.

British Foreign Secretary Robin Cook, who is co-chairing the talks along with French Foreign Minister Hubert Vedrine, praised the Albanian side for showing "real courage" in promising to sign onto the peace plan.

"We need the Serb side to show the same courage," Cook said.

Despite international pressure, the Serbs continued to dismiss the Albanian plan to sign.

"Unilateral signing does not mean anything," Milutinovic said.

Asked whether NATO bombing of Serbia was now more likely, he said, "This is not out of the question, but we are not afraid of that."

Fighting in Kosovo, a province in Yugoslavia's republic of Serbia, has killed more than 2,000 people and displaced 300,000 during the past year.

The fighting has picked up since the first round of talks ended, with the two sides apparently vying for position ahead of a political settlement.

U.N. refugee officials said at least 9,000 people have been driven out of their homes since Monday alone.

The scale of fighting is at its highest level since an October cease-fire, UN spokesman Kris Janowski said.

In a move that could bring further trouble to the talks, Yugoslavia asked Interpol to assist in the arrest of the head of the ethnic Albanian delegation, Hashim Thaci.

The 29-year-old Thaci is wanted for murder in connection with the Kosovo rebellion, the state-run Tanjug news agency said.

Clothes and non-perishable goods cover the floor of the Multicultural Student Organizations office waiting to be shipped to Central America as part of an effort to help the hurricane victims of hurricanes George and Mitch.

Groups work to help hurricane victims

By JENNIFER O'NEILL
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Hispanic American Leadership Organization has been working with other organizations since last fall, such as Alliance for Hispanic Affairs, the Multicultural Student Organizations office and the Diversity and Dual Career Development office to collect clothes and non-perishable food items to hurricane victims in Central America.

"We initially began just watching it over the news and saw the devastation it caused," Carlos Contreras, HALO president and junior in business and Latin American studies, said. "It caused such an impact with Hurricane George, and then Hurricane Mitch came out of nowhere."

Gabriela Sabates, academic adviser in the College of Arts and Sciences and a member of Alliance for Hispanic Affairs, has worked with the college to help spread the word about the food and clothing drive.

"We just wanted to support what HALO is doing," Sabates said. "The countries and states in Central America received lots of help at the beginning, but as other things started to happen all over the world, the help is less intense."

HALO has contacted the Salvation Army and is looking to work with the Manhattan Alliance for Peace and Justice to transport the donations to Central America.

"We're hoping to target Nicaragua and Honduras, because they were the hardest hit," Contreras said.

To contribute any clothing or non-perishable food items, people should take their donations to the Multicultural Student Organizations office.

The deadline to donate was initially set for the end of February, but plans to transport the food and clothes fell through.

Now HALO is trying to get materials sent by spring break, Contreras said.

"We've done other food and clothing drives during Christmas time and then for the needy, but this is the biggest turnout so far," said Leticia

Martinez, HALO member and junior in marketing and international business.

HALO has received more donations than expected.

"You know, if that happens, it's a successful project," Contreras said.

By doing this campaign, HALO wants to provide a sense of hope and vision that there is help coming all the way from Kansas, Contreras said.

It's a way for HALO to promote itself as an aid to outreach programs not only to other cities and states but to other parts of the world, he said.

"If other people and organizations at the university see us doing it, then maybe they can join and help, or start their own campaign," Martinez said.

"By what we've seen and heard, it's been really disastrous in Central America."

Election Committee's decision fair to Salina

Students at K-State-Salina are missing the bigger picture when it comes to Student Governing Association elections.

Many of the students there who thought they should be able to vote for student body president are doing a disservice to the autonomy of their own campus. After all, K-State-Salina has its own student body president and Student Senate — they even pay their own, separate privilege fees.

In fact, students at K-State-Salina were the ones to put the whole autonomy process in motion. It was because of their hard work that K-State-Salina became recognized as its own campus and a legitimate division of K-State.

But you can't have it both ways.

True, the Manhattan student body president does represent all of K-State when it comes to the Kansas Board of Regents. But that is a small amount of representation when it comes to the costs and complications it would take to allow K-State-Salina students to vote. Additionally, the 800 K-State-Salina students could possibly swing an election, despite the fact that most campaign platforms don't affect them.

Take, for example, some of the more prominent issues of this year's elections: SafeRide, city-wide transportation and residence hall dining plans. Manhattan students have reason to feel strongly about these topics. Salina students don't.

Even after the president takes office, most of the legislation he signs would have little to no effect on the K-State-Salina campus.

Finally, the election rules do take into account the students in the College of Technology who are taking classes on the main campus. According to the SGA Constitution, any student taking at least one hour on the main campus has full voting rights. So the students who are directly affected by Manhattan's student body president can help determine who that person will be.

But for the students who feel they are not being represented fairly, it's important to realize that the Elections Committee's decision was not trying to imply that K-State-Salina students are inferior to Manhattan students.

If anything, it just reaffirms the fact that K-State-Salina is becoming more independent on its own accord.

I've never before in my life seen any sporting event so fixed as the Holyfield/Lewis fight on Saturday. It was all just a scam to promote the rematch. Both fighters deserve Emmys for their performances.

I attended the Landon Lecture featuring Senator John McCain this Monday, and I think more students should. It was excellent and I applaud those involved in getting speakers for this lecture series.

A sure sign of spring — KU losing in the NCAA Tournament.

I think important issues are being discussed all over campus every day. But instead of hearing about those, we get articles from Ken Wells about Ken Wells and from Mary VanLeeuwen about Mary VanLeeuwen. I'd like to see articles about the issues going on around campus.

The Landon Lecture Series is a true disappointment. Get some interesting speakers.

By the way, the women's NIT was $3 for students, $5 for adults. If the conspiracy theorist would have gone to the game, they would have realized it and not written it in the paper.

What last weekend's NCAA Tournament showed was that even decent teams get lucky sometimes with decent coaches. K-State doesn't have a decent coach.

I was alarmed and offended to see a free cat advertised in the classifieds under sporting goods. I had no idea the Collegian endorsed such inhumane sports as cat bowling and cat shot-put.

Kansas State University has a men's and women's golf team, and I was just wondering why the university newspaper never covers their competitions.

AGE OF MODERNIZATION

Holding on to blanket of security won't save people from daily battles

VIEWPOINT

SAM SACKETT

We are living in a time of peace and a time of turbulence. My generation in America today is much like a small boy clinging to a warm blanket in the middle of a battlefield.

We do not know what it means to suffer through the atrocities of war. We have never been forced to serve in the military with a lingering threat of losing our life. We have no concept of what it means to suffer daily.

Never before in history have we seen such prosperity through modern conveniences. Nearly everything is automatic — from toothbrushes that brush to machines that record messages. Even our thinking skills are becoming automated through the extensive use of computers and calculators.

I recently taught a free-enterprise class during home economics in a middle school. I was shocked at the response these students gave to a simple division question. (Something like what is 84 cents divided by 12.)

The students gave me a bewildered look. It was like they had never done math in their heads. I simplified. "What is 84 divided by 12?" I asked.

To my amazement, one of the girls asked if she could return to her desk and get a calculator. I said, "No."

They finally figured it out after writing the problem down on paper and making several guesses.

These were average-looking students. This was not a special-needs class. There was nothing peculiar about how they acted around each other. They were just ordinary middle-school children with an overt reliance on convenience.

My concern is not about modernization or the pace of its development. My concern lies in how we are preparing ourselves as individuals. The people of my generation are being encouraged to become smart holograms. Good people. But nothing inside.

Add to this a deficiency of inner strength and spirit, and we find ourselves a think-free, intuition-driven generation.

With the reliance upon our blanket of modernization, I fear that if our conveniences suddenly were taken away, many young people would be left in terrible distress. They would be in such perturbation that life itself would become more of a burden than it is worth.

As much as the phrase is overused, the "if it feels good, do it" mentality has saturated this generation to the point where we are not content with our options. My generation has turned socializing into alcoholism, marriage into sex with a condom and frustration into violence.

We are resolute on trying anything that brings pleasure and happiness. And this only if it is immediate. The big picture is something of a failed theory. But this is to be expected considering our lack of inner richness.

Despite our shallow tendencies, there remains within us a longing for something bigger than ourselves. When the lights go out and the room is silent, the lingering cry can be heard from within. If we hunger to know the truth, if we want to know the truth, if we seek the truth, then we shall surely find it.

The child standing in the battlefield has the option of either holding on to his blanket or looking for help. The war is all around with smoke and terrorizing sounds. Yet there is someone standing nearby offering hope and freedom.

This person is Jesus. Not the church. Not being religious. Not making money so we can have more convenience. But an inner relationship with him.

Before asking if this hope brings happiness, we should instead ask if it is true. If it is true and we have enough courage to inquire, then whether or not it brings us contentment is of little concern. It is like wondering if breathing oxygen will make us happy. It really doesn't matter. Either we need it, or we do not.

If, after we have sought the truth, we discover this "following Jesus" is not the answer, we can at least claim to be an honest non-believer.

C.S. Lewis said you might not know whether you ought to follow Jesus, but you do know you should search the question diligently, and not be an ostrich with your head in the sand.

Refusing to know Jesus is what ails us. Ignoring the entire notion is what kills us.

The small boy enjoys the soft blanket. But eventually there will come a point when its warmth does him no good when faced with death.

READERS write

Growth not inevitable, small business important to Manhattan community

Editor,

My wife Charlotte had her chance at R.A. Hartman a few weeks back, replying to his column on why the Anderson Avenue widening was a sign of needed improvements. It's my turn now, because his column in Thursday's Collegian states that the American Dream is about survival of the fittest, that Wal-Mart Supercenters are signs of progress, and growth is inevitable. It should be three strikes and you're out in the column-writing business, but I'm guessing he'll be with us for the rest of the semester.

Hartman stated, "The free choice of each consumer is the force that will decide what is successful and what isn't. When small businesses are protected by limiting the customer's choice, it is a conservative move that refuses to face the fate of every bustling, growing town in middle America." People like me who'd like to see small businesses survive are described as "small-town sentimentalists." An important point that seems to be lost in far too many news stories about the Wal-Mart proposal is that few of us are opposing the presence of some kind of a Wal-Mart in Manhattan. We've had one since 1971. Nobody is asking that that store be closed. I'm not even opposed to a supercenter, as long as it is on a site that does not do harm to the city's Comprehensive Land Use Plan, which is the zoning document that attempts to support the downtown central business district and to restrict suburban sprawl. So, it is just plain wrong to say those of us in opposition of the supercenter are trying to limit customers' choices. Shop wherever you want. If you like parking several hundred feet from the entrance in some vast asphalt lot and then hiking several hundred feet under acres of fluorescent lights to find the few things you want, go for it. I prefer to walk to or park near a smaller store, walk right in, talk to somebody I know and leave again with the product I sought, all quicker than at any supercenter I've ever endured. Call it old-fashioned if you want to. I call it time and energy efficient.

Finally, the "inevitability of growth" catechism. "Opposition to the supercenter idea can be healthy, but only if it is accepting of the idea that growth is inevitable and that planning for this growth is better than reacting to it." Oh, R.A., please just do a little thinking. If you're about 6 feet tall, why is that when you reached the end of adolescence you didn't keep growing? If you hadn't, today you'd be, what, maybe 9 1/2 feet tall? If growth is inevitable, why don't tall, thick trees grow trunk-to-trunk in a wilderness forest? If growth is inevitable, why does Alan Greenspan caution against investing government money in the stock market? Growth only seems inevitable to those who equate the American Dream with owning the most toys, to those who want to re-engineer the creation we've been given to fit their private visions of paradise, to those who consider undeveloped land to be a "resource" waiting to be transformed into a tax generator, to those who, in spite of studying the social sciences, seem to have no decent definition of what it means to be a community.

R.A. Hartman was right in the phrase that said "... planning for this growth is better than reacting to it." But a more thoughtful person would say, "I realize growth cannot go on forever. It doesn't in natural systems, nor in economic ones. We're on a finite 'resource' called planet earth, and as an American, I am using up six times my share of it. Because we are the envy of the rest of the world and have exported our American Dream to every hamlet via our movies and television, they are going to want to consume as voraciously as we do. I pray for the day when the blinders of the catechism that 'growth is good' fall from my eyes and those of my countrymen, and we realize that we're in a bubble in time, not unlike the Anasazi who flourished, then vanished. We may have the technology to delay or even reverse that fate, but we put ourselves in peril if we fail to understand the limits of growth."

K-State-Salina students prohibited from voting Monday in runoff election

Editor,

I was really upset Monday when I picked up my copy of the Collegian and found that "Polls open today for Heinrich, Prieto runoff." See, unlike those thousands of K-State students in Manhattan who decided not to vote, I did not get the opportunity to vote.

What exactly am I talking about? Well, one of the nine colleges of K-State was not allowed any votes in last week's elections. The College of Technology and Aviation, a.k.a. K-State-Salina, had no elections for our student body president, and from the sounds of it, unless something had happened before 7 p.m. Monday, we will not have a chance.

Let me tell you a little about K-State-Salina. We have more than 800 students attending this campus. Some are going here because this college has their desired major. Others are going here to get a few general requirements out of the way before they go to main campus. I personally like the idea that I can go to a school this size and still be a part of K-State, which is the university I always knew I wanted to attend.

The most interesting part of this phenomenon is that our campus could take the elections. Out of the 800 students who go to this campus, at least 400 of them would vote if they had the opportunity. Since only one pair of candidates took the time to campaign on this campus, then it's obvious whom most students here would vote for. This runoff election would not even be necessary with that kind of backing. Ironic, isn't it?

All the other colleges of our university beware. This year it was the College of Technology and Aviation. Next year, who's it going to be? The College of Agriculture? Maybe the College of Engineering?

Starting college later fosters appreciation for education, money

A few things have happened to me recently that have added up to the conclusion that I am too old to be in college. I know that I am not old compared to the rest of humanity, just too old for my surroundings. Consider the following:

1. I have classes with someone who was born in 1980. Granted, I was only six in 1980, but it's still a year I remember. Heck, the editor in chief here at the Collegian was born in 1979. I don't think I should have to work for anyone who does not remember when microwaves were new and has no opinion on Betamax vs. VHS.

2. A kid at the grocery store called me ma'am. I do not look like a ma'am. The fact that I probably could have whupped this punk in arm wrestling is my only consolation; that, and I'm not a bagger and he is.

3. I am one of about four people on campus with a personalized e-mail address. See, back in the day, when you applied for an e-mail address here at K-State you got to pick it. Then all the youngsters showed up, and from that day forward it was assigned to you. This used to make me feel cool. Now I feel like I've been in school too long.

4. I'm starting to consider that health insurance is a good idea and worth paying for on my own.

5. I turned 25 last month, and now I am in a different age bracket on surveys. Nothing drove the point home quite as hard as that.

I don't feel I've been wasting my time here, just that I could have used it more wisely. There are many important reasons why I am still in school at this ripe old age: I didn't start until a year after I graduated from high school. I got married, I changed my major, I got divorced. I worked at the Collegian — a lot. All that adds up after a while.

Every year, more of my friends go away to the real world, and I am left here. This must have been how the last Mohican felt.

Let's just think this will be a rant column, let me assure you, it's not. There are clear advantages to being a little older while making your way through college.

Knowing that I can drink whenever I want pretty much means I won't.

I know the value of my education, mostly because I'm paying for it. When I took the year off between high school and college, I worked. By the time I was done, I had worked graveyard shifts in a truck stop, been a sales clerk in a department store and waited tables. Nothing makes you appreciate the value of your buck like pouring coffee for truck drivers at 3 in the morning.

When I started college, I was a year older and about five years wiser than the other girls in my class. Honestly, it made me a better student, and I would recommend that to anyone.

I was complaining about this to my father a while ago. He made me stop talking because he was laughing too hard to breathe. No sympathy there.

When he finally regained his composure enough to talk, all he could tell me was to get over myself. When he was my age he had two small children and a stack of bills as tall as the oldest one.

So in that respect I am lucky. I'll get out of college with a minimum of financial damage. There will be awkward moments while I explain what was going on in college for 6 1/2 years.

And I will be older, but wiser.

Improving self-concept key to public speaking

By CHRISTINE ROEGER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Improving self-concept is the main key to recharging individual's batteries, said Rex Pawlak at a lecture in the K-State Student Union Big 12 Room on Tuesday.

He instructed about 40 students and five faculty members on how to improve their communication skills and become more successful by learning about their own personality.

"Walk up to a mirror and tell yourself, 'I like myself.'"

—Rex Pawlak
Powercat Toastmasters guest speaker

Pawlak was invited by the Powercat Toastmasters.

Toastmasters is an international, non-profit organization that seeks to enhance speech performance, encourage leadership and increase listening abilities.

Pawlak, an instrumental engineer, won 1998 Toastmaster of the Year in the district including Kansas and half of Missouri.

Audience members each gave a 30-second speech, which included an introduction of themselves and the reason for attending the speech.

"The self-concept of ourselves can create a whole flow of achievement we never even dreamed of," Pawlak said.

Self-esteem, self-image and self-confidence relates mostly to the self-concept theory, he said.

Describing each of the three concepts, he said self-esteem reflects the value as a human being as an individual.

He gave the example of a shy toastmaster member who almost came to tears when she had to speak in front of a group. After eight months she began competing in speech contests, he said.

A characteristic of low self-esteem is the inability to accept a compliment. He said those with high self-esteem do not compare themselves to others.

"Walk up to a mirror and tell yourself, 'I like myself,'" Pawlak said. "Feel good about the way you look."

Self-image pertains to a performance in a specific role.

He advised using the three P's method of visualization to build up self-image. He said the visualization has to be personal, in present tense and positive. He said the subconscious mind then cannot tell the difference between reality and imagination.

To improve self-confidence, he advised being courageous enough to try something new and practicing until improvement is observed.

"I find the opportunity to improve your speaking skills and to practice listening on a regular basis one of the best things to better your career," said Tom Roberts, assistant dean of engineering and founder of the K-State Toastmasters chapter.

North Korea agrees to U.S. inspection

By EDITH M. LEDERER
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — In a significant breakthrough, North Korea agreed Tuesday to let U.S. inspectors make several visits to a suspected nuclear weapons site without charging Washington, D.C., the $300 million it initially demanded for access.

In return, the United States promised to help the famine-stricken communist nation increase potato yields.

The dispute had threatened a 1994 accord under which North Korea agreed to freeze what the United States believed was a developing nuclear-weapons program, in exchange for energy supplies and help from the United States, South Korea and Japan.

A statement issued after the latest talks between U.S. Ambassador Charles Kartman and North Korean Vice Foreign Minister Kim Gye Gwan reaffirmed Washington, D.C., and Pyongyang's commitment to the 1994 accord in its entirety.

Since last August, the United States has been pressing for access to the Kumchang-ni underground site, 25 miles northwest of Yongbyon, where U.S. officials said they believe North Korea might be developing nuclear weapons in violation of the 1994 accord.

Kim reiterated North Korea's claim that the site has nothing to do with nuclear activities. He said, without elaborating, that it is related to sensitive national security purposes.

Even though the United States refused to pay the $300 million that North Korea demanded, Kim told reporters that his government was happy with Tuesday's agreement.

Under its terms, North Korea will give the United States "satisfactory access" to Kumchang-ni, with an initial visit in May and additional visits to remove U.S. concerns about the site's future use.

Secretary of State Madeleine Albright said in a statement that the U.S. team will have access to the entire site and follow-up visits can continue as long as our concerns about the site remain.

The United States agreed in return to take a step "to improve political and economic relations between the two countries" by helping North Korea increase potato yields.

Food shortages and famine-related illnesses have killed up to 2 million of North Korea's 23 million people during the past three years, according to U.S. congressional estimates. Two-thirds of all children under seven are malnourished, and lack of food has stunted the growth of millions more.

Kartman said discussions on details of a pilot potato program will continue in the coming days and that he hoped for a quick implementation.

While insisting food donations would not be part of any deal, the United States earlier this month pledged 500,000 tons of additional food aid in response to an appeal for donations by the U.N. World Food Program. North Korea demanded 1 million tons.

For the U.S. government, Kumchang-ni was a boulder in the middle of the road to improved relations with Pyongyang.

A senior U.S. official, speaking on condition of anonymity, said removing "the very substantial suspicion" about the site should have a salutary effect on getting international funding for two nuclear power reactors for North Korea, as called for in the 1994 agreement.

While Tuesday's agreement might resolve a large U.S. nuclear question, it will not diminish U.S. concern about a possible revival of North Korea's nuclear program. U.S. officials also expressed concern that North Korea might be producing biological and chemical weapons.

House International Committee Chairman Benjamin Gilman, R-N.Y., said he supported the agreement but was concerned the precedent would encourage other rogue nations to charge the United States for ensuring their compliance with their international agreements.

"This agreement smacks of a food-for-access deal, which could lead to further provocative actions on the part of the North Koreans to extort future concessions from the U.S.," he said in a statement.

Henry Sokolski, executive director of The Nonproliferation Policy Education Center in Washington, D.C., said the 500,000 tons of grain the United States is giving North Korea will cost tax payers $165 million annually.

He questioned what the United States will get from the deal, since North Korea reportedly is working on making weapons-usable uranium and has had almost a year to clean out Kumchang-ni. He also said the defense department reportedly has identified 12 other sites to visit.

Tutors, laptops assist traveling baseball team

■ Increase of road games require players to balance academics, competition.

By ERICA COURTRIGHT
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Baseball revolves around numbers. Players and coaches study and recite batting averages, RBIs and ERAs, but the K-State baseball team, without a home field, is concerned with another number this season: GPA.

Forced to play the majority of games on the road while Frank Myers Field is under renovation, the baseball team is facing academic hardships. Weekend road trips have meant missing Thursday afternoon and Friday classes, less study time and decreased access to computers and study aides.

"It's mentally and physically draining, being on the road all the time, but the Academic Learning Center has done a lot to help us out," sophomore third baseman Josh Cavender said.

The Athletic Academic Center has been working with the baseball program to lessen difficulties incurred with additional travel. On the first four long road trips, academic counselors and tutorial staff members were sent with the team along with laptop computers and a modem connection.

"Students are allowed to miss nine class days, and the baseball players will miss about 12 days, so missing class isn't the big concern," said Phil Hughes, associate director of the Athletic Academic Center. "The real concern is access to the library and computers."

The Athletic Academic Center also has worked with the coaches to organize study sessions during bus rides and at the hotel, as well as talking extensively with professors.

"We're trying to be proactive rather than reactive," Hughes said.

The Athletic Academic Center encourages players to make arrangements with professors ahead of time to schedule make-up work. Head coach Mike Clark said it is not uncommon for academic advisers to administer exams while the team is on the road.

"We've had to do a lot of work on the road," he said. "It's been extremely tough. We've spent a lot of off time — that normally would've been for resting — in study hall, but we haven't let the players use it as an excuse."

Despite the efforts to combat problems, players are at risk of becoming academically ineligible.

Hughes said any student athlete who practices or competes must be certified by the institution. Academic eligibility is determined by the Office of the Registrar and the dean of the college in which the student is enrolled. Therefore, expectations for a freshman are not necessarily the same as for a junior.

Clark said there was a possibility some of the players were at risk of losing academic eligibility. He said at-risk players had been pinpointed and were required to spend two to three hours a night in supervised study hall.

Clark said a couple of players were red-shirted because the coaching staff didn't think they could maintain grades while traveling.

"There's a couple of kids who probably could've helped us out a lot this season, but because they got off to a slow start first semester, we decided to red shirt them," Clark said. "We decided to use it as a lesson that academics come first and athletics second."

Freshman Brett Reid already has made a name for himself on the K-State baseball team, playing at third base and pitching. An all-conference, all-metro middle infielder and pitcher for Liberty, Mo., High School, Reid is trying to adjust to playing at the college level.

PROVING HIMSELF

Freshman standout works to make transition from high school to collegiate baseball

Instead of red-shirting his first season, freshman Brett Reid made the transition from a high school standout to jumping right into the K-State baseball team's starting line-up.

Reid, an all-conference, all-metro middle infielder and pitcher from Liberty, Mo., is pitching and playing third base for the K-State baseball team.

"At the beginning of the year I still felt like a high school player trying to prove myself," Reid said. "It just seems like everyone's bigger, faster and stronger now."

Besides adjusting to the higher level of play, Reid also had to adjust to a new position. After playing second base and shortstop in high school, head coach Mike Clark moved Reid to third base.

Clark said Reid was a solid defensive player, but he lacked the speed and range of other middle infielders on the squad. With his strong arm, Clark said, the move seemed natural.

"I'm still trying to learn the position," Reid said. "At first, I made a lot of mistakes."

Reid's contribution isn't limited to his time at third, however, as he's also a part of the pitching rotation. He has spent time this season on the mound and posted a 1-0 record. He leads the team in strikeouts, with 33, and has the lowest ERA, at 6.04.

"He's a starting pitcher, so we're looking to get as many quality starts as possible," Clark said. "We look for him to get us into the seventh with the lead."

Clark said he's seen growth in Reid's pitching already this season.

"He's realized that you can't just go out and throw. You have to pitch," Clark said. "He's learning that you've got to have more than just good stuff. You've got to hit your spots."

Reid's contribution has yet another dimension: his bat. When he's not in the game defensively, Reid stays in the line-up as a designated hitter. He bats third in the order with a .311 average, the third highest on the team.

"One of our strongest points is our hitting," Reid said. "When the guys ahead of me get on, it makes it easier. I look to drive in runs."

In the future, Reid has aspirations of playing at the next level, but for now he said he's just trying not to make a lot of the freshman mistakes.

He said he hopes his team will finish the season at more than .500 and even qualify for a regional, but said the lack of a home stadium is a definite hardship to the team.

"It'd always be nice to sit down and have a locker room," Reid said. "It's also nice to sleep in your own bed."

Reid said being a freshman on the squad didn't pose any problems, and it wasn't as bad as he'd predicted.

"I'm just trying to mix in and maintain a spot on the team," Reid said. "My goal for this season is to learn."

Recruit fits niche for basketball, football teams

By JON BALMER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

When K-State football coach Bill Snyder announced his 25 committed recruits on Feb. 4, the excitement surrounding Wichita Southeast prospect Rashad Washington mainly was due to his status as an all-state running back and the 1,327 yards rushing Washington compiled over four years.

Praising Washington only for his football abilities, however, wouldn't tell the entire story. One of the state's best basketball prospects, Washington's skill on the hardwood could translate into a two-sport future for the Wichita native.

The prestige Washington earned on the football field was matched by his basketball talents, where he earned first-team all-state honors this season and led Southeast to its first Class 6A title in 28 years this past weekend. A four-year starter, Washington guided the Buffaloes to a 23-2 record and became the school's all-time leading scorer, finishing with 1,373 points. Washington's point total ranks third all-time in Wichita's City League.

Leading Southeast with 27 points in Saturday's state final victory, Washington's dual talents made the possibility of going two-way at K-State a greater possibility.

"Equally," Southeast basketball coach Carl Taylor said when asked about which sport Washington was better suited for in college. "He could play Division I (basketball) if he wants to."

Scouted by Texas Christian, Oklahoma State and Washburn for basketball alone, K-State's signing of Washington could pay off dividends for both Snyder and basketball coach Tom Asbury in the future. Standing 6 feet 4 inches, Washington could fit into Asbury's system as a shooting guard or a small forward, quite similar to Cortez Groves' role.

Football is no different for Washington, Southeast head coach Dan Johnson said.

"He could play tight end, he could play free safety and he could play cornerback," Johnson said. "He's just an athlete."

Washington's knack for playing at any position can be traced to his junior year at Southeast. Participating in 4-1/2 games as a defensive back, Washington grabbed eight interceptions in this short span. Following this heralded campaign, Johnson said opposing teams refused to throw to Washington's side last season.

A tough recruit to land, Washington's decision to attend K-State was an important addition to Snyder's well-rounded class. Johnson said Washington, a quiet, modest athlete, didn't share his main reason for choosing Snyder's program, but he suspected assistant coach Mo Latimore's persistent recruiting and genuine concern was a primary factor.

"He just out-hustled everybody," Johnson said of Latimore's efforts. "That's what K-State does."

With K-State only a 2-1/2 hour drive from Wichita, Marsha Washington, Rashad's mother, said her son's decision to play in Manhattan also had a great deal to do with proximity.

"A major reason he chose to attend Kansas State is because of their closeness and family orientation," she said. "That means a lot to Rashad."

Although the chance to play two prominent sports at a Division I program was exciting, Marsha Washington, said a decision wouldn't be made until next fall.

"That's an open door," Washington said of her son's two-sport future. "It would be nice if he did, but a lot of that depends on his schedule and academics."

Convinced Washington has the ability to succeed in both sports, Taylor said the recruit's biggest dilemma, should he choose both programs, would be managing his time.

"I think he'll fit in well," Taylor said, "but it will be hard for him because of all the time required, but he has to find that out."

Astros' pitchers shut out Royals, ending 9-game winning streak

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

HAINES CITY, Fla. — The Kansas City Royals seem able to beat everybody this spring but Houston.

Taking advantage of 10 walks handed out by Royals pitchers, the Astros stopped Kansas City's nine-game winning streak Tuesday with an 8-0 victory.

Six Houston pitchers combined on the shutout, just the second loss for Kansas City in 13 games. Both losses have been to the Astros.

Starter Scott Elarton (2-1) went four innings and gave up two of Kansas City's five hits. Trevor Miller, Jeff McCurry, Bob Scanlan, Doug Henry and Jay Powell all worked one scoreless inning.

The Astros managed just seven hits.

It was a terrible outing for Royals' starter Dan Reichert, who was making his second start. The first-round 1997 draft pick struck out Craig Biggio leading off, then walked the next three batters before yielding a two-run single to Dave Clark.

Richard Hidalgo followed with an RBI single, then after another walk re-loaded the bases, Alex Diaz made it 4-0 with an infield grounder. Reichert gave up just two hits but five walks.

Houston added a run in the seventh Orber Moreno's bases-loaded walk.

Then it tacked on three more off Bart Evans in the ninth with the help of doubles by Glen Barker, Daryle Ward and Ryan Thompson. Barker and Ward doubled leading off, then after Evans struck out Jack Howell and Dave Clark, Thompson hit an RBI double and eventually scored on Paul Bako's sacrifice fly.

Council says Lewis robbed of title

By JOHN RICE
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MEXICO CITY — The head of the World Boxing Council said Lennox Lewis was "unjustly robbed of a clear victory" and is the deserving heavyweight champion.

Jose Sulaiman also criticized one of his organization's judges at the bout, New York authorities and the rival International Boxing Federation.

"Lennox Lewis, regardless of the results, showed that he is the authentic heavyweight champion of the world," Sulaiman said Tuesday from his organization's headquarters.

Sulaiman said his group and the World Boxing Association originally agreed on judges from neutral countries for Saturday night's bout in New York.

He said the WBC had strongly objected to the IBF's nomination of judge Eugenia Williams because she had little experience in title fights and, like Holyfield, is American.

As a result, he said, the WBC dropped its original Dutch judge and appointed Larry O'Connell of Britain, "of unquestionable integrity and competence and a proven impartiality."

"We would like to think that image of impartiality was unconsciously assumed by Mr. O'Connell, but he definitely exceeded it," Sulaiman said.

O'Connell scored the fight 115-115, but he later said he was surprised by his own score because he thought Lewis had won.

Stanley Christodoulou of South Africa had it 116-113 for Lewis, and Williams scored it 115-113 for Holyfield — favoring him in the fifth round that almost all observers ruled for Lewis.

Sulaiman said the WBC did not have a supervisor seated alongside those of the other two sanctioning bodies.

"We again lament this very unjust decision which without any doubt affects the image of boxing," he said.

Rookie Cubs pitcher needs surgery to replace ligaments in right elbow

■ Kerry Wood to sit out next season; rehabilitation expected to take 1 year.

By RONALD BLUM
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

PEORIA, Ariz. — Kerry Wood's 1999 season lasted all of 26 pitches.

Baseball's brightest young pitcher, whose fastball dazzled fans during his rookie season, will undergo ligament replacement surgery on his right elbow within two weeks. Rehabilitation is expected to take about one year.

"Obviously it's a huge loss for us — the NL Rookie of the Year and a huge part of our rotation," Cubs general manager Ed Lynch said after an MRI in Chicago revealed the injury.

The 21-year-old right-hander has had a tender elbow since the Cubs drafted him out of high school in June 1995, and he missed all of last September while it was sore.

Wood returned to throw five innings in the Cubs' final playoff game against Atlanta, then was hospitalized twice at the start of spring training because of an upper respiratory and gastrointestinal illness. The latest injury occurred Saturday, on the first warmup pitch of the second inning of his 1999 debut against Anaheim.

"We were very, very conservative with Kerry," Lynch said. "Whether this was bound to happen, I can't answer."

The Cubs clubhouse in Mesa was quiet after players learned the news on a cool and rainy morning. Wood not only is respected, he's one of the most well-liked players on the team.

"Selfishly, he's so much fun to play behind, watching those overpowering fastballs," first baseman Mark Grace said.

Wood intends to get a second opinion and allow swelling to subside before going ahead with surgery. Dr. Lewis Yocum, the Anaheim Angels team physician, or Dr. James Andrews most likely will perform a ligament replacement — a procedure considered radical when Dr. Frank Jobe used it to save Tommy John's career in 1974 but now is commonplace.

"Thankfully we live in a day and age when they can put us back together like an erector set," said Cubs pitcher Terry Mulholland, ensured a spot in the rotation because of the injury.

Wood, who struck out 20 against Houston last May 6 to tie Roger Clemens' record for a nine-inning game, was a big part of baseball's renaissance last season.

He not only was a key to the Cubs' pennant hopes but had become one of baseball's top attractions. He was rewarded with a $690,000 salary — a record for a player with less than one year in the major leagues.

"It's too bad for him, too bad for baseball," Atlanta manager Bobby Cox said. "I don't like to face the guy, but he's a special, special pitcher. We need those to come along in the game like that, who really pack them in."

Despite his promise, there was always the danger he would burn out too soon, such as Mark Fidrych and David Clyde. For now, the Cubs are positive Wood can rebound next year.

"I feel for him," reliever Rod Beck said. "I think as a pitcher every one of us has laid in bed with an ache and a pain thinking it's over."

It was the latest blow to baseball during a spring training that has seen Atlanta first baseman Andres Galarraga, New York Yankees manager Joe Torre and Florida infielder Mike Lowell diagnosed with cancer; Hall of Famer Joe DiMaggio die following lung cancer surgery; and Houston outfielder Moises Alou severely damage a knee.

Galarraga and Alou are out for the season, and Torre is expected to miss 1 to 3 months. Lowell already has returned.

"I think our players will take this as a challenge we will have to overcome, the same as Atlanta and Houston are doing," Cubs manager Jim Riggleman said.

Following the retirement of Michael Jordan, Wood and Sammy Sosa were Chicago's biggest sports stars. It's hard to see the Cubs, the lovable losers who haven't won a pennant since 1945 and a World Series since 1908, getting back to the playoffs without Wood, even if Sosa has another 66-homer season.

"We'll keep Sammy on the field — put a glass case around him," Beck said.

Several Cubs said Wood might benefit from having the surgery so early in his career.

"I've heard guys who had the ligament replacement say the ligament that's put in is stronger and more durable," Mulholland said.

Florida's Alex Fernandez, who tore a ligament during the 1997 NL championship series, is the latest top pitcher whose career was saved by the procedure. Cubs pitcher Jeremi Gonzalez had a ligament replaced by Yocum last Aug. 21 and is ahead of schedule, hoping to return during the first half of the season.

For now, the injury means the Cubs are left with a rotation of Steve Trachsel, Kevin Tapani, Mulholland and Jon Lieber, with Scott Sanders or Kurt Miller the top candidates for the fifth spot. While Kansas City's Kevin Appier and perhaps others are available, Lynch didn't seem inclined to make a trade.

"I think every club is looking for a pitcher," he said. "We have the people to put in the rotation."

Manhattan to plant new trees along city streets

By REED DUNN
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The city of Manhattan's Parks and Recreation Department will plant 244 trees this year as part of its annual spring program.

J. David Mattox, forestry supervisor, said the planting program has been around since the early 1980s and is essential to the community for many reasons, including the increasing size of Manhattan.

"The city is getting larger, so if we don't keep up a plan to plant new trees and replace the older ones, it will come to the point where we don't have trees at all," Mattox said.

About 14 different species of trees will be planted along street rights-of-way. Mattox said this area measures 30 feet in each direction for most residential streets. There are some streets, especially in the older parts of the city, where the width is much smaller or much larger.

Trees will be planted to replace those that have been removed due to age or weather damage. Excess trees will be focused toward city additions where there is a lack of trees or a lack in the diversity of species.

"Anywhere we have removed a tree, one will automatically be replaced," Mattox said.

The city has removed nearly 100 trees in the last year, leaving more than half of those to be planted available for other areas.

Citizens can submit requests by Program started in 1980s allows residents to request trees from city.

obtaining an application from the parks and recreation department.

Eric Berg, community forestry coordinator for the Kansas Forest Service, said research should be done about tree growth before planting takes place. Berg said good intentions often go bad when the wrong trees are planted near areas that do not allow for proper growth.

"There is no such thing as a bad tree," Berg said. "It's just the wrong tree in the wrong place."

The Manhattan program takes into consideration the importance of placement to avoid future problems. One concern for tree placement is the interference of electrical and phone wiring.

"Small trees are planted under utility lines so they don't have to be whacked up by utility companies," Mattox said. "This is one reason diversity is very important."

In past years, the success rate of the program has averaged 90 percent or better. Common reasons for not having perfect success with the program are drought and its opposite, over-watering.

Berg said trees often are killed by negligence during lawn maintenance. Mowers and trimmers are a primary cause of damaged seedlings.

"Weed whackers kill more trees than anything else," Berg said.

Even though the program focuses directly on right-of-way planting, Mattox said trees are important and encourages citizens to plant trees for their personal benefit.

"If you want to see the importance of trees, stand in a parking lot on a hot summer day and then go stand under a tree in the shade," Mattox said.

Mattox and Berg said they agreed research is important before someone purchases and plants a tree.

"Any time they want to plant a tree, it would be good for them to get advice from someone with expertise in the area," Mattox said.

"It's a real shame to have five or 10 years in a tree that you realize is not what you wanted."

Berg said he thinks the city is taking a proactive step with the spring program and said it is important for the future of tree development.

He said it is also important in case problems occur within a species, killing off a specific portion of the tree population.

"Programs like this don't wait for something like that to happen. They are looking far ahead into the future and planning for it today," Berg said.

"There are only two times to plant a tree — right now or 20 years ago."

Travel agents offer benefits with packages, advise people plan early for trips

By KELLY D. LYNN
KANSAS STATE COLLEGE

Just a few days remain until many students will be lounging at the beach or hitting the slopes.

David Garvin, owner of Creative Travel, said this year has seen an increase in spring break package sales.

"We're finding more students are taking spring break trips this year," Garvin said. "We're up about 30 percent above what we were at last year, and that equates to a lot of people."

"The hottest place right now is Padre. We sold the most placements to Padre, followed by Cancun."

Locations in Florida, ski resorts and Disney World locations also experienced an increase in ticket sales due to the time of year, said Brenda Simons, manager of AAA of Kansas in Manhattan.

Unfortunately, many travel agents tell consumers that if they haven't made travel plans yet, it becomes increasingly difficult as the week of spring break approaches.

"For spring break, you really need to start planning around October," said Terry Pearson, manager of Kansas State Travel Services.

Garvin said he agreed.

"People are booking farther in advance than ever before," he said. "We sold out our last blocks of space in the middle of January."

To save money, it's not a bad idea to book your bowl trip and spring break trip at the same time, Garvin said.

Most travel agents said students generally pay more for trips the longer they wait to plan, and package prices increase the closer it gets to spring break.

By making plans in advance, travel agencies have more resources and time to find students the best deals possible, Simons said.

"Airlines require 21- or 14- or seven-day advance purchase, no matter where you go," she said. "Those numbers just vary according to which airline you go."

Planning ahead also is essential for safety reasons, Pearson said.

"Unless you already have a hotel, we don't recommend going," he said.

Pearson said he advised students to call around if they choose to book their own flights.

When directly calling airlines, Pearson said he thought students should ask many questions.

"Always ask for the lowest airfare. Otherwise, they'll give you the highest," Pearson said. "Tell them if you're flexible on dates."

Garvin said he does not recommend students to purchase tickets directly from airlines because travel agencies can help students to get the lowest airfare price.

"An agency does not just represent one airline or cruise line, but it represents them all," Garvin said. "Our goal is always to get you the very lowest fare that is possible because, as a result, if you feel like you've been treated fairly, you'll come back again."

Garvin said he thought booking flights over the Internet can be risky because of inaccurate prices. He said he recommends students make arrangements with agencies in person.

While most travel agencies impose a service charge, Simons said, many also include benefits for using their services.

"When students purchase their tickets, they receive a $100,000 life insurance policy automatically," Simons said.

Once travel plans have been made, there are certain items that students should remember to bring, Pearson said, such as photo identification.

If students travel to Mexico, they should bring a copy of their birth certificate with the raised seal or a passport along with their photo identification, Simons said.

Ultimately, though, planning ahead is the best step of action to take when considering options for spring break trips, Simons said.

"Many people don't find the best deal because they've waited too long," she said.

"ALWAYS ASK FOR THE LOWEST AIRFARE. OTHERWISE, THEY'LL GIVE YOU THE HIGHEST."

Mitchell exhibit opens in Strecker Gallery

By GIGI MCCALL
KANSAS STATE COLLEGE

The Strecker Gallery will have a reception at 5:30 p.m. Friday in celebration of Kansas artist Dean Mitchell and his work.

Attendants will have the opportunity to meet Mitchell and view his work, which will be shown in the gallery through April 17. The solo-artist exhibit showcases Mitchell's watercolor paintings.

Gallery owner Julie Strecker said Mitchell's display pieces are new works and most of the work is quite detailed and realistic.

"Mitchell paints with up-close detail," Strecker said. "His works are pleasant, not hard-edged."

Bill North, curator of the Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art, said he thought what makes Mitchell's work interesting is the way he combines abstraction and realism. Mitchell's artwork was displayed at the opening of the Beach art museum in October 1996.

"He really is a master of his materials," North said. "And I think what many people are drawn to in his work is his exacting empiricism, an almost hyper-photo-realistic approach."

Now living in Overland Park, Kan., Mitchell said his interest in art began when his grandmother bought him a paint-by-numbers set as a child. Mitchell said he thought his grandmother instilled strong values in him that influenced both his life and work as an artist.

"I am very concerned about the way my images influence people," he said. "Some people think if you say, 'Be responsible,' it's censorship. I don't agree with that."

Mitchell said that since his graduation from the Columbia College of Art and Design, he has worked to build his career as an artist while staying true to himself.

"If I tried to please everyone who has criticized my work, I would go crazy," he said. "I let the chips fall where they may. I am constantly striving to get better."

Mitchell said he thought much of today's art is done to make some kind of political statement.

"Critics are now saying if the art doesn't address sexuality or politics, then it isn't art," Mitchell said. "Now they've got people actually having sex in galleries, and they say that it's art. That's bizarre."

Mitchell also said he thought it is important that young people who are pursuing art learn the fundamental skills of drawing and painting and that while trends might come and go, true art is timeless.

"A true artist paints what is true to him," Mitchell said. "A true artist paints what he loves and tries to pull from the best of humanity."

"I'm not saying all art has to be pretty, but art should have meaning that people can relate to. Artists should experiment with some sense of conscience and understanding."

'Analyze This' depicts satirical view of mafia

By CORBIN H. CRABLE
KANSAS STATE COLLEGE

Billy Crystal and Robert De Niro have redefined the term "odd couple" in their new movie, "Analyze This."

In the comedy, directed by Harold Ramis, Crystal portrays Dr. Ben Sobel, a psychologist who has his work cut out for him when he treats prominent mobster Paul Vitti, played by De Niro, for panic attacks and general stress.

While juggling this responsibility, Sobel also is trying to plan his wedding with fiancée Laura (Lisa Kudrow, of TV's "Friends"). Just when it seems the couple is ready for their big day, however, Vitti and his dim-witted sidekick (Joe Viterelli) appear on the scene, demanding Sobel's services. While Sobel initially refuses each time, Vitti uses the only method of persuasion he knows — force.

Needless to say, Sobel always ends up complying with his patient's wishes.

The entire movie is the story of your average tough, stupid dolt and your normal, everyday guy. Mayhem ensues when they are thrown together. However, the contrast between Sobel's suburban life and Vitti's Italian mafia family makes for a comical setting.

Even those not familiar with gangster movies will recognize the basic elements of life in the mafia, including the cheesy gangster names, the Italian restaurant and the "Godfather"-esque dialogue. Ramis even adds a spoof on a Catholic Mass in which Sobel and Vitti stand up and sit down every 20 seconds.

While Crystal and De Niro dominate the screen, I was surprised and disappointed to see Kudrow didn't have a larger part in the movie. With her growing popularity, one would think her character would be more developed. Then again, when you have two famous actors like Crystal and De Niro, who have been a household names for so long, I'm sure anyone sharing the screen with them would feel like they're walking in their shadows.

Another big name in entertainment adds his talent to the movie as well. Musician Tony Bennett lends his voice to the movie, topping off a star-studded flick with many hilarious one-liners.

So, whether you're seeing the movie for its comedy, big names or satirical portrayal of mobster life, "Analyze This" definitely will exceed all your expectations.

Dow Jones propelled to record-setting high

By JOYCE M. ROSENBERG
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — The Dow broke 10,000 Tuesday, propelled by a record eight years of U.S. economic growth, a boom in high technology and investor enchantment with the Internet.

The Dow was there for just under a minute, and never went past 10,001.78. But that was enough to make traders on the floor of the New York Stock Exchange cheer, wave their hands and toss hand-ripped confetti.

As often happens after such milestones, sellers took over, and the index of 30 blue chip stocks ended the day down 28.30 at 9,930.47.

Still, analysts were pleased with the breakthrough.

"It's just a number, but hitting 10,000 says to me it's continued confirmation that the bull market is alive and well," said Alfred E. Goldman of A.G. Edwards & Sons Inc. in St. Louis.

The Dow Jones industrial average is now up 8 percent this year on top of an unprecedented four-straight years of double-digit growth.

The index was pushed over the top by everyday business-world events that often prompt buying — announcements this week of corporate mergers and the promise of healthy earnings from big companies such as Union Carbide. But these were just the immediate causes.

The Dow 10,000 rocket was launched early in the decade, fueled by a growing economy combined with low inflation and interest rates that kept consumers spending and corporate profits rising. The rise of personal computers and technology improved corporate America's productivity even as manufacturing jobs steadily declined.

The market got an additional boost in the past year through an explosion of enthusiasm for the Internet. Hundreds of companies have rushed to put a ".com" after their names, expecting a big payoff by selling everything from Furby dolls to stocks online.

America Online, for instance, went from $16 a year ago to $105 now. Yahoo, the online directory service, has gone from $21 to $175.

Economic troubles in Russia, Asia and Latin America threatened several times over the past two years to halt the Dow's advance, and the Dow slipped below 7,500 as recently as Oct. 8.

Then stocks rebounded on a series of three interest rate cuts by the Federal Reserve.

The recent perception that the troubled foreign economies are rebounding also allowed the Dow to resume its climb.

To many market watchers, the Dow's ascension to 10,000 is more of a curiosity or media event.

"It doesn't affect the long-term view," said investor Mark Harchelroad, interviewed outside a Fidelity Investments office in New York.

A Dow at 10,000 inevitably raises questions of what happens next.

One cause for concern is that the market's recent gains have been concentrated in a few business sectors, most notably Internet and high-tech stocks.

Many other businesses are lagging behind.

One argument in favor of even higher stock prices is the growing level of stock ownership among individuals.

Still, some fear that the fascination with the Internet that has driven the market's recent gains also could be its undoing.

Ralph Acampora, director of technical research at Prudential Securities, said he disagreed.

"It's a real industry," he said. "They're not making Hula Hoops. Some of these companies will survive, but not all of them."

Pastor apologizes for swindling parish

By PAT LEISNER
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla. — The Rev. Henry Lyons, president of one of the nation's largest and most influential black denominations, sobbed and apologized as he resigned Tuesday, two weeks after being convicted of swindling more than $4 million.

"I'm just so sorry about all of this," he said quietly at a news conference outside his Bethel Metropolitan Baptist Church, where he told the board of the National Baptist Convention USA of his decision.

"I'm truly repentant about it. I hate that I hurt so many people," he said, his voice breaking.

He was surrounded by other ministers, who told him: "You're not alone."

"I appreciate it," he said as he began sobbing.

The Rev. E.V. Hill, who will run for president in the convention's next elections, which are in September, patted Lyons on the back and told him: "We are with you. We forgive any errors you have made. We love you."

Lyons' wife, Deborah, then kissed him on the cheek and defense attorney Denis de Vlaming helped lead him back into the church where he has been pastor for the past 27 years.

Lyons, 57, is awaiting sentencing March 31. He faces three to seven years in prison under state sentencing guidelines. He also is expected to plead guilty to similar federal charges.

The Rev. S.C. Cureton of Mauldin, S.C., the convention's vice president at-large, will take over immediately as president until the September election. The board voted to support Hill as their candidate.

Lyons was convicted Feb. 27 of racketeering for swindling corporations seeking to do business with convention members. The defense had described the transactions as failed business deals, not as crimes.

Date-rape drug at party blamed for death of girl

By JIM SUHR
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WOODHAVEN, Mich. — Four men were arraigned Tuesday on charges they slipped a date-rape drug into the soft drink of a 15-year-old girl who later vomited, went into a coma and died.

Samantha Reid, a high school freshman, was one of three teen-age girls secretly drugged at a party Jan. 16 on Grosse Ile, an affluent island community in the Detroit River, prosecutors said. Police said Samantha's Mountain Dew was spiked with either GHB or GBL, drugs that can render victims helpless. She died the next day at a hospital. One of the other girls also required hospital treatment.

Charged Tuesday with manslaughter and poisoning were Erick Limmer, 25; Joshua Cole, 18; Daniel Brayman, 18; and Nicholas Holtschlag, 17.

Poisoning carries a maximum sentence of life in prison. Manslaughter is punishable by up to 15 years behind bars.

The party was at Limmer's apartment.

The Drug Enforcement Administration has said GHB is linked to 32 deaths and 3,500 overdoses nationally since 1990.

In 1990 the Food and Drug Administration banned GHB amid concerns about its use as a dietary supplement.

academic credentials.

Buckwalter's ruling on Proposition 16 struck down using such tests as minimum requirements but did not outlaw altogether the use of standardized tests, which many educators have long said are racially and culturally discriminatory. Its forerunner, Proposition 48, resulted from a tumultuous NCAA convention in 1983 when a group of reform-minded school presidents began pushing for toughened academic requirements.

The NCAA has said the earliest it could establish new guidelines is October, since it first has to consult its members before instituting new rules.

One of Proposition 16's supporters, Penn State football coach Joe Paterno, has said minimum test score standards should not be eliminated because of the possibility of bogus test scores.

"What worries me is that it is not going to be worth getting (an education) if we keep lowering the standards," Paterno said Tuesday during an appearance in Philadelphia. "I mean, what are they going to get (out of going to college)? Are they going to get a meaningful education?"

COMMISSION

The commission also unanimously approved a modified proposal to allow transmission devices to be attached to city-owned facilities under a lease agreement with the city. The original proposal involved requests from Western Wireless and Aerial Communications to place cellular antennas on the Sunset Zoological Park Water Tower.

Upon review, the commission decided to open the policy to include a broader range of transmission equipment, given the alternative of putting antennae or dishes on the ground near neighborhoods.

City Manager Gary Greer urged the commission to make the policy broad, with city administration reviewing specific equipment requests for the future.

"We can't imagine the things that will happen in the next 10 years, and we can't write a policy that will incorporate all of this," Greer said.

In other business, the commission authorized Greer or his designate to bid upon two lots up for auction at the April 12 Pottawatomie County Tax Foreclosure Sale.

The commission also voted 4-1, with Commissioner Karen McCulloh against, to issue $1.6 million in industrial revenue bonds to Light Solutions Inc. for purchase of start-up equipment. The commission already had voted at its Feb. 16 session to award Light Solutions a $50,000 grant and a $250,000 loan out of the Manhattan Economic Development Opportunity Fund.

ANDERSON

said he hoped to have the first phase completed by the beginning of September.

"The construction is going very well," Petty said. "I am very pleased with its progress. Due to good weather and the flow of paper work, we are about three weeks ahead of schedule."

As for recent concerns about increased flooding along the Anderson Avenue corridor due to the use of antiquated pipes with the new storm sewer culverts, Petty said the project's design indicated flooding would not be any more of a problem than it has been in the past.

"The storm sewer design is not unusual for this type of project," he said. "The hydraulic design indicated we could attach the smaller pipes to the new culverts without any additional flooding. If anything, we should see a decrease in flooding in certain areas along the corridor."

The Manhattan City Commission and the Kansas Department of Transportation entered into a city/state agreement in March 1998 to improve Anderson Avenue. The agreement states that the Kansas Department of Transportation is responsible for 80 percent of the project's costs, while the city of Manhattan is responsible for the remaining 20 percent.

Petty said Anderson Avenue has been in need of reconfiguration for a number of years, and this project allows the city to make the necessary changes along the heavily traveled road.

"The project will be a tremendous benefit to the city once it is completed next year," Petty said.

Campaign violations filed for email distribution

By JESSICA THOMAS
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Although the elections for student body president and vice president have ended, there is still some debating going on.

The debate is over new campaign violations.

Joe Ashley, elections chair, said there have been several complaints filed since the end of the elections.

"Most of the recent violations were about mass distribution of e-mail," Ashley said. "I don't know how we're going to handle it. It got petty on Monday, with each group filing stuff against each other."

Ashley said there have been violations filed against both the Jason Heinrich and Leo Prieto campaigns. He said he hopes these violations won't affect election results, but he didn't know for sure.

Ashley said no action would be taken until sometime after spring break.

The alleged violations of the Heinrich campaign include sending e-mail propaganda to members of fraternities and sororities and to engineering ambassadors.

The alleged violations of the Prieto campaign include sending e-mail propaganda to students from Garden City, Kan.

There were questions about the legality of handing out propaganda in front of the residence halls and Derby Dining Center, but Ashley said those were not considered violations.

"We were trying to get more voters," Ashley said. "Both parties were there, so we talked to the Association of Residence Halls and determined that it was OK."

Paul English, Elections Committee Hearing Board chair, said there hadn't been any formal complaints filed about the possible residence hall violations.

"It is kind of a gray area, really," English said. "Joe made the call that it was acceptable, so unless we get a call from someone who was offended or who thinks it was a violation, we can't do anything."

English said Heinrich and student body vice presidential candidate Gabe Eckert approached him Monday about campaigning outside the dining center. English was not sure if it would be a violation, so he called Ashley. Members of the Kansas State University Association of Residence Halls were contacted, including president Nick Lander. Ashley then determined the campaigning would be acceptable.

Although Prieto said he and his running mate Chris Bainter were not made aware that campaigning at the residence halls and dining centers was allowed, Ashley said both Prieto and Heinrich were present when he informed them it was allowed.

Both candidates said they did not personally send out e-mail messages. They did say, however, they are now aware e-mails were sent out by their supporters.

"I can confirm that I did not do that, but I don't know if anyone in those respective organizations did," Heinrich said.

"Apparently, our campaign manager sent an e-mail to the engineering ambassadors to remind them about voting in the elections," Heinrich said.

Prieto said he is also aware that e-mails were sent, but that he had not sent them himself.

"One of our supporters took it upon himself to send out messages to students that we knew from Garden City, but they weren't strangers," Prieto said.

Heinrich said he was disappointed by the way the election had ended.

"I thought both parties ran a fair and honest campaign, so it's kind of disheartening now. I don't know what they are trying to do by bringing up all these charges now," Heinrich said.

Lincoln presenters make stop at Fort Riley

Fort Riley got a blast from the past Wednesday.

A couple with vast knowledge about the lives of President Abraham Lincoln and his wife Mary Todd Lincoln performed and spoke about the Lincolns' lives.

The couple, Max and Donna Daniels, two of the most well-known Lincoln presenters in America, had a busy day, which began with meeting Gov. Bill Graves.

"We were privileged to meet the governor on our way over here this morning," Donna Daniels said.

Performance-wise, the day began at Fort Riley Middle School talking to the students about what it takes to succeed. Donna Daniels spoke to the crowd about Lincoln's failures before he became president, referring to his failed shops and two declarations of bankruptcy.

"History is full of people who overcame challenging events and went on to be successful," she said.

The pair spoke to the students about how important it is to obey all rules, not just the ones they agree with.

"Good citizens do not pick and choose,"

Donna Daniels said. "You have to obey rules and laws, even the ones you don't like."

They said they wanted the students to leave believing in who they are, and that it is possible to succeed. Max Daniels' character, President Lincoln, asked the students who a future president might be, and then told the crowd to answer him by saying "me."

Max Daniels said the pair tries to incorporate teachers' input into the performance.

"A lot of children are under so much pressure to succeed that they don't realize they are going to fail a lot," he said. "They need to realize that failure is just a part of the process. That's not the end of it."

After another performance at the elementary school, the couple put on a play

Wednesday night in Fort Riley. Max Daniels said the play was written by his wife.

"My wife writes everything," he said. "She is the brains and the beauty behind the operation."

Max Daniels said the play deals more with the couple's personal life and portrays President Lincoln as a human being.

"There's a few public things, like the Gettysburg address, but we try to point out that these are human beings," he said. "Mr. Lincoln would have been almost humbled by the fact that we have almost deified him. He was just a human being who had a difficult job to do."

— Max Daniels
Lincoln presenter

"I'm still learning — I think life is a learning process," he said. "I would be disappointed if I knew everything there was to know about anything."

Police officer files discrimination suit against K-State

By JOE HURLA
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

An officer with the K-State Police is suing the university for $75,000, claiming he was discriminated against by his supervisor.

In a complaint filed with the U.S. District Court, K-State police officer Gary Jones alleges his supervisor, Cpt. Robert L. Mellgren, "had a racial animus and bias against blacks."

Jones alleges Mellgren attempted to limit and curtail his employment and subjected him to disparate and onerous terms and conditions of employment.

According to the complaint, Jones' income from employment has been diminished, and his prospects for promotion or alternative employment have been curtailed or eliminated.

Furthermore, Jones alleges, he "has suffered, and continues to suffer pervasive emotional suffering and distress, consisting of mental pain, anguish, suffering and humiliation" due to the discriminatory actions.

Jones, who was hired at the K-State Division of Public Safety in January 1997, also alleges K-State acquiesced in, ratified or condoned the discriminatory and retaliatory actions.

According to the complaint, K-State "has failed to officially objectively investigate the actions of its agents, so as to discover the commission of such acts and practices, and so too has failed to correct, ameliorate and remedy these practices despite notice of the same."

K-State responded to Jones' complaint by denying most of his allegations, including his claim of racial discrimination.

Jones alleges he "has suffered pervasive emotional suffering and distress, consisting of mental pain, anguish, suffering and humiliation" due to the discriminatory actions.

According to K-State's answer to the complaint, Jones was not entitled to any of the damages.

Jones alleges that Mellgren refused to promote him, and refused even to consider his promotion, because he was black.

Instead of promoting him, Jones alleges a white officer was promoted who had no more training and experience than he.

In its official response, K-State said a white officer was indeed promoted instead of Jones but denied that race was a factor.

The university has asked the court to dismiss Jones' claim for several reasons. K-State said Jones' complaint, in whole or in part, fails to state a claim upon which relief might be granted. It also claims the court lacks jurisdiction over the subject matter of the claims, and that part of the claim violates the 11th Amendment.

University Attorney Richard Seaton declined comment.

Mellgren and Ronnie Grice, director of K-State Police, would not take calls on the subject of the case.

The trial, for which no date has been set, will take place in Kansas City, Kan.

Yugoslavia prepares for possible NATO attacks

By GEORGE JAHN
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

PRISTINA, Yugoslavia — Fearing a possible NATO attack, the Yugoslav army bolstered its combat readiness, moving thousands of troops closer to Kosovo amid reports Wednesday that peace talks in France were on the brink of failing.

The war preparations also came as European Union forensic experts issued a report saying that dozens of ethnic Kosovo Albanians slain in January appeared to be civilians, not combatants.

Yugoslav army troops were setting up anti-aircraft missiles in the mountains northwest of Kosovo's capital, Pristina, rebel leader Sulejman Selimi said Wednesday in his first interview since being appointed supreme commander of the Kosovo Liberation Army last month.

Speaking to The Associated Press and another reporter at his home, Selimi said KLA fighters dug in at the Cicavica Mountains saw the missiles being unloaded from several covered trucks.

Senior officials with the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe said the missiles could be the Yugoslav version of a heat-seeking, Soviet-built short-range missile that monitors have seen on regional roads.

NATO has said Serb failure to sign on to a Kosovo peace plan could result in air attacks against Serbian and Yugoslav strategic targets.

A U.S. Defense Department spokesman said Tuesday that the government forces "certainly are bracing for war."

Pentagon spokesman Kenneth Bacon said 16,000 to 21,000 Yugoslav army units are now on the perimeter of the Serbian province, up from about 10,000 reported two weeks ago and 4,500 in late February. Another 14,000 to 18,000 Yugoslav army forces were said to be deployed inside Kosovo — not counting the thousands of heavily armed Serb police forces.

The ethnic-Albanian run Kosovo Information Center reported large movements of Yugoslav army and police forces throughout the province. In the northern Podujevo region, 30 army vehicles arrived Wednesday as reinforcements, it said.

In Pristina, the release of the final report on the slayings in the southern Kosovo village of Racak three months ago did little to end the controversy about whether the victims were massacred by Serbs or killed in battle.

While the head of the forensic team, Helena Ranta, called the Racak killings "a crime against humanity," the report did not directly accuse Serb forces of a massacre, nor did it support Yugoslav

Senate Education Committee endorses higher education bill

By LEW FERGUSON
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — The Senate Education Committee on Wednesday endorsed and sent to the Senate a plan to restructure the governance and coordination of higher education institutions in Kansas.

The House Education Committee will begin discussing a similar plan today. Chairman Ralph Tanner, R-Baldwin City, said he expects to have a version of the bill endorsed and forwarded to the House by Friday.

The plan, which has been on a legislative fast track since it was proposed two weeks ago by Sens. Christine Downey, D-Newton, and Tim Emert, R-Independence, is given the best chance of passage of any of two dozen proposals put forward in the last quarter of a century.

Emert, the Senate majority leader, said he would schedule Senate debate for Tuesday.

The Senate and House versions, while encompassing the same basic plan, are expected to have significant differences — particularly in funding. The bill likely will wind up in a joint House-Senate conference committee, which would craft a final version late in the session.

The Senate wants the bill to focus entirely on a new governance-coordination structure and not deal with funding.

Tanner said the House is almost certain to add a financial component, both to reduce property tax mill levies in community college districts and to change the method of providing state funding to the two-year schools and Washburn University of Topeka.

Community colleges and Washburn receive state aid on the basis of how many full-time equivalent students they have. The House plan, drafted by Rep. Dick Reinhardt, D-Erie, would provide the schools with a set amount of money each year, ending the pressure to recruit

House votes on concealed weapons bills, amendments

TOPEKA — The House tentatively approved a bill under which the state would license Kansans to carry concealed weapons Wednesday.

The bill advanced on a 75-45 roll-call vote. The House plans to take final action today, and passage then would send the measure to the Senate.

Supporters said the bill will make Kansans, especially women, safer and reduce crime.

Critics said the bill would result in more gun-related deaths and accidents. They also note that Gov. Bill Graves, who vetoed a similar bill two years ago, has not changed his position.

"I ask you to think about this bill as a personal safety issue," Rep. L. Candy Ruff, D-Leavenworth, said.

The House opened its debate by rejecting amendments to put the issue to a statewide vote and increase the age when a person could obtain a permit to carry a concealed weapon.

Rep. Larry Campbell, R-Olathe, proposed an amendment to require a statewide vote in November 2000.

"I want the voters of the state of Kansas to have a chance to vote on this issue," Campbell said.

Critics of the amendment said legislators should not duck the issue and suggested the amendment would kill the bill. They also said the amendment was unconstitutional.

"What in the world are we here for, if it's not to make hard decisions?" Rep. Doug Mays, R-Topeka, asked.

The amendment was rejected, 43-81. The House also turned back an amendment by Rep. Bill Feuerborn, D-Garnett, to raise the minimum age to carry a concealed handgun from 21 to 25.

"When you're 18, you can go to war for your country," said Rep. Susan Wagler, R-Wichita, who opposed the amendment.

The House rejected the amendment on a vote of 37-75.

Bill to decide on spending of Kansas tobacco money

TOPEKA — A House committee on Wednesday endorsed a bill that would spell out how the state would spend the money it receives from a settlement of lawsuits against tobacco companies.

The timing of the Appropriations Committee's action, however, had some legislators suggesting the decision had more to do with embarrassing House Speaker Robin Jennison than public policy.

Appropriations Committee members took strong exception to the allegation they wanted to upstage Jennison.

However, their reaction was an indication of how much tension remains between moderate Republican supporters and other, more conservative House members.

The Appropriations Committee endorsed its bill on a voice vote, one day after Jennison, R-Healy, appointed a nine-member Select Committee on Tobacco Settlement Funds to discuss how the money should be spent.

The bill endorsed by the Appropriations Committee would set up a trust fund to handle tobacco revenues, estimated at $1.6 billion over 25 years. The fund would have a nine-member board of trustees led by the state treasurer.

A separate 11-member Children's Authority would be appointed to make recommendations to the governor and legislators on how trust funds would be distributed. However, the law would require all of the money spent to go to children's programs.

The law now requires half of the money from the tobacco litigation to go to children's programs. The state is not expected to receive its first payment until next year.

"I like that they're protecting all the funds for child-related services," said Sen. Sandy Praeger, R-Lawrence, chairwoman of the Senate Public Health and Welfare Committee.

Tire marks might be key for Amtrak crash investigation

BOURBONNAIS, Ill. — Investigators are analyzing tire tracks in the mud to determine whether the truck driver at the center of the deadly Amtrak crash had tried to go around the crossing gates and beat the train.

The crash between the tractor-trailer and Amtrak's City of New Orleans killed at least 11 people Monday night in the nation's deadliest train wreck in three years.

Tire marks were found on the road, on timbers at the crossing and in the mud along the shoulder of the road, Bob Lauby, director of the National Transportation Safety Board's office of railroad safety, said Wednesday.

"The tire marks may belong to the truck, they may not," Lauby said. "Put all these marks together, and we should be able to recreate exactly where the truck was and how it negotiated that crossing."

On Tuesday, Wisconsin Gov. Tommy Thompson, Amtrak's chairman, said the train engineer had accused the truck driver of trying to go around the lowered crossing gates instead of waiting for the train to pass.

John Goglia of the NTSB said the engineer had been too shaken to provide a good account of what happened.

"We will wait to get that from the engineer ourselves," he said. "When we get it in direct testimony to ourselves, then we will respond to it."

Study finds marijuana has use as medical treatment

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Marijuana has medical benefits for people suffering from cancer and AIDS and should undergo scientific trials to see how it works best, a panel of medical experts concluded Wednesday in a report to the federal government.

The drug remains illegal under federal law, despite ballot measures approving its use in Alaska, Arizona, California, Nevada, Oregon and Washington. The new report is sharpening debate over its use.

The Institute of Medicine, an affiliate of the National Academy of Sciences, said marijuana's active ingredients can ease pain, nausea and vomiting. It urged the development of a standard way to use the drug, such as an inhaler.

The conclusion was greeted warmly by most marijuana advocates, but opponents said they worry the report will encourage marijuana use.

"Let us waste no more time in providing this medication through legal, medical channels to all the patients whose lives may be saved," Daniel Zingale, of AIDS Action, said.

Rep. Bill McCollum, R-Fla., who led the fight to get the House to condemn medical marijuana last fall, said he is deeply concerned the report might encourage people to smoke marijuana.

It's known that some of the chemicals in marijuana can be useful, he said, but their place is in inhalers or pill form.

"We should not sanction smoked marijuana, because there is no way to control that," McCollum said.

Former NATO general faces sentence for misconduct

FORT LEWIS, Wash. — A retired Army general pleaded guilty Wednesday to conduct unbecoming an officer for having affairs with four subordinates' wives.

Retired Maj. Gen. David Hale, 53, is the highest-ranking Army officer to be court-martialed since 1952.

The charges carry up to 11 years in prison and the loss of Hale's 75,000-a-year pension. NBC, citing unidentified military sources, reported Tuesday that Hale's plea bargain provided only for a 30-day jail sentence and a $75,000 fine. Army officials would not comment.

Hale was allowed to retire with honor last year despite claims of improprieties he committed while he was a top NATO commander in southern Europe. The resulting furor led the Pentagon to change its rules to bar top officers from retiring while facing allegations of wrongdoing.

At the time the allegations were raised, Hale had spent four months at the Pentagon as deputy inspector general for the Army.

He was allowed to retire with honor, leading some congressmen to complain of a double standard, since people of lower rank had been court-martialed in similar situations.

Last year, Sgt. Maj. Gene McKinney, the Army's highest-ranking enlisted man, was reduced in rank and reprimanded after he was convicted of obstruction of justice in a sexual misconduct case.

In another case, Air Force Lt. Kelly Flinn, the nation's first and only female B-52 pilot, was given a general discharge after being charged with adultery for having an affair with the husband of a female airman in North Dakota.

Oreo-stacking contest piles on the cookies

By JESSICA THOMAS
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

His determination was matched only by his concentration. He bit his lip and focused on the cookies in front of him.

"On your mark, get set, go!" With those words, his hands sprang into action. One by one, he gingerly placed each cookie on top of another. The stack grew taller and taller. He stole a glance out of the corner of his eye at his opposition. He managed a smile; he was ahead by two cookies. The win was in the bag — he thought.

Then, without warning, the stack began to wobble, and before he could save them, the cookies crashed to the table. The crowd gasped. He tried to recover, but the damage was done.

There would be no win for Jon Selisker today.

The third-annual Oreo-stacking contest, sponsored by Nabisco, was Wednesday in the K-State Student Union Stateroom. The contest, also sponsored by Chartwells Food Service, was open to anyone.

The object of the contest was to stack as many Oreo cookies as possible in 15 seconds. There were three heats of four contestants, with the top-four contestants squaring off in a final runoff round.

Kyong Benavides, Union food service employee, was the winner, with a stack of 21 Oreos.

She received a bag of Oreos, a bendable Oreo figure and an Oreo T-shirt for her stacking prowess.

Selisker, junior in advertising, was one of the four contestants in the runoff round.

"I'm disappointed with my loss," he said. "I thought that I would at least finish second or third, but not fourth. I had a big stack, but it fell over at the last second, and I just didn't have time to re-stabilize."

The next Chartwell's-sponsored contest will be a scratch-and-win for a compact disc player.

Mark Bastian, junior in construction science management, tries to keep his stack of Oreo cookies from falling during an Oreo-stacking contest Wednesday in the K-State Student Union Stateroom.

Udall scholarship awards students with interest in environmental policy

By CHRISTINE ROEGER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

It is humankind's relationship to its environment that will determine the survival and happiness of each individual, Morris K. Udall said while working as a congressman.

Udall died of Parkinson's disease in December last year.

In honor of Udall's work for the environment, public lands and natural resources, the U.S. Congress established a Morris K. Udall $5000 scholarship for undergraduate students in 1992.

This year, five K-State students are selected to compete on the national level for the scholarship. The Udall Review Committee will announce the winners in May. Beth Powers, scholarship adviser at K-State, said.

Sege Smith and Sarah Glaser, both seniors in biology; Stacy Meredith, senior in geography; Jennifer Wright, senior in biological and agricultural engineering; and Steven Alley, junior in chemistry, are the K-State nominees.

"I think that the scholarship is a wonderful opportunity because it encourages students to enter environmentally related fields," Alley said.

Udall had an effect on environmental policy and tribal issues. For this reason, the awards are based on the merit of two groups of college students.

The first category of students who qualify for the award are American Indian and Native Alaskan students who pursue careers in health care or tribal public policy.

Students with the career goal of environmental public policy form the second eligible group.

Each scholarship covers expenses for tuition, fees, books, and room and board up to a maximum of $5000. To be considered, students must be nominated by their college or university.

"In my career, I hope to act as a link between environmental policy groups and the engineering community," Alley said. "I feel that engineers are going to play a key role in implementing the decisions environmental public policy groups establish."

He said industries have the potential to improve drastically their effect on the environment in positive ways.

Meredith, senior in geography, said she wants to work for the government.

"Applying for this scholarship has really helped me focus on what I would like to do in the future," Meredith said. "I would like to work in government at the national level and focus on environmental issues."

"Although some would like to ignore it, the state of the environment affects everyone," she said. "I would like to do my part in ensuring that future generations have a clean planet."

The situation of the environment is determined by ignorance and potential disaster. Politicians have the potential to have a huge effect, Meredith said.

Besides the four K-State students who qualified for the environmental-related scholarship, Smith has the prerequisite to apply for the health-care award. She is the first American Indian at K-State who is eligible.

Smith said she wants to become a physician and likes to help American Indians in under-served areas.

"The scholarship might help me with my application for medical school in summer," she said. "There is a big shortage of physicians in rural areas."

In the past, about two Kansans have been selected per year, Powell said. In 1996 and 1997, two K-State students received the award each time. Last year, one student from the University of Kansas won.

"I think the scholarship is a wonderful tribute to Morris K. Udall," Meredith said.

"He dedicated his life working for very important causes, and this scholarship allows others to follow in his footsteps."

"I think that the scholarship is a wonderful opportunity because it encourages students to enter environmentally related fields."

Anderson construction to benefit Manhattan

Probably everyone who lives in Manhattan has been annoyed and inconvenienced by construction on Anderson Avenue. Even the news that the construction is about three weeks ahead of schedule is no consolation to the driver who has been stuck in traffic for what seems like hours.

But it's not that bad.

The city of Manhattan has in fact been doing a great job of speeding the process along and trying to keep citizens informed with the use of signs and hotlines.

It's also commendable that the city has not neglected pedestrian safety during this time. Intersections and crosswalks that are in disarray still are marked clearly and have signals allowing pedestrians to cross safely.

The project is on schedule to be completed in early summer 2000, but drivers already are starting to see the benefit the turning lanes will provide. While the loss of parking spaces in the K-State Student Union parking lot are hassle to deal with, it's important to note that such problems are insignificant when considering the gains of the Anderson Avenue expansion.

Patience is key. Looking at the positive aspects of the construction and the progress already made makes the entire project pass more quickly.

Marriage vs. Marriage

What the dreamy glances across the room don't tell you.

VIEWPOINT

MATT HARTMAN

College, for some people, is not just a place for higher education, but it's also grounds for getting married.

Let's not imagine any longer that an institute — which clots tens of thousands of young adults together to prepare them academically for an adult life of work thereafter — would not also produce the type of energy that makes a person want to find the social and emotional support for life after graduation.

Here is where relationships move from being concerted movements conducted by high school quirkiness to something longer-term. Around the sophomore year of college, one slowly begins to find out the idea of being a couple now carries with it the feeling: "Maybe this means I'm gonna hafta commit to something?"

Perhaps this is a new thing because before, one could not even conceive of a commitment concrete enough to invoke fear. Yes, somehow fear is a latent product of adulthood.

Nevertheless, fear rationally created can be fear rationally exterminated. This fear ultimately stems from inexperience, and a few lessons learned here may very well save some heartache down the long road of adulthood.

With any relationship involving even the slightest hint of marriage (though that might be an oxymoron), there are two things to look out for that can help one spot a bad marriage in the making. One warning sign concerns in-laws and the other is with the arguments.

Firstly, anyone who has had a difficult time with in-laws knows how excruciatingly painful an experience this can be. The difficulties one has with in-laws are nevertheless a good indication of one's future with the spouse-to-be.

The reason for this is somewhat complex. What is important to understand is that as people get older — so long as most things stay equal — people will become more and more like their parents.

As this principle takes effect, nothing can stop it. All of this trouble, though, can be somewhat difficult to foresee in one's relationship with one's in-laws.

Secondly, one can sight a difficult marriage in the making by how the couple resolves its disagreements. Conflicts, it turns out, can be read like tea leaves as a fortune of the couple's future.

Beginning with the fact that all couples argue, and that no two people can completely agree on everything (save complete obedience by one member), it must be accepted that no relationship will ever rid itself of arguments. The important issue now is not winning per se, but being able to compromise.

The art of compromise takes patience and forethought. As one enters into an argument, emotion can cloud one's judgment and make one say or do something that one doesn't really want to do, leaving a feeling of regret with the individual.

At any rate, the key to this problem is to go back and apologize. Then, when the emotions screw things up again — and they will screw things up again — the solution this time cannot be just to apologize, but one must come to terms with the source of the problem: the emotions.

From this perspective, one must learn how to relax, whilst in the middle of an argument, and see in what direction these emotions are taking things; one must be able to envision where one is going with these emotions. Then, after the déjà vu feeling passes, one must focus on thinking rationally, seeing the other's point of view, and working towards compromising.

As a people get older and start to involve themselves in more serious and long-term engagements, it pays off to match this ambition with equal parts forethought. Specifically, the ease with which one gets along with one's in-laws and at resolving conflicts with one's spouse can help provide some gauge onto whether this match made in heaven will survive its stay on earth.

This is for the sports columnist who said it was nice to see a Wildcat team in the second round of the NCAA Tournament. If I'm not mistaken, a Wildcat team won the entire thing last year, and just beat KU the other night.

It's disgusting that even though we're in college we still treat elections like we were in high school. I can't wait for the day people vote for issues and platforms instead of popularity.

I called in last week and said if Gonzaga doesn't win the whole NCAA Tournament, the whole thing's rigged. To all the people who laughed at that, HA HA HA HA HA HA HA HA.

Oooh. Look at me. I'm a leprechaun.

I just wanted to say congratulations to Leo Prieto and Chris Bainter for nearly overcoming the popularity contest that is our campus elections.

I'm really pretty tired of hearing about how Aaron Shea is so upset about how the student body didn't stop to look at the candidates. I'm quite certain after his photograph nude in the library appeared in the paper, nobody wanted to vote for him anyway, and he's just a little upset about that.

I would like to commend the folks at the Vet Med Center for going an entire week with releasing any bison onto our campus. Good job, guys.

Did anyone else notice that Joe Ashley, elections chairman, was wearing a Heinrich/Eckert campaign shirt in the Collegian?

I would just like to thank Rick Wooten for his intelligent insight about how the presidential elections resemble a scene from an Indiana Jones movie. I would also advise the Collegian not to quote idiots in the future.

READERS write

Changes in system would help student voter turnout

Editor,

I am a student who is concerned about the turnout at the last Student Governing Association general election. A lame 14 percent of our student body actually voted, which I consider to be a big problem.

In general, I have found that the student body is uninformed about each candidate's issues and is not motivated to vote because of inconvenience and lack of knowledge. Some people might disagree with me (probably about 14 percent of campus), but the statistics don't lie.

I think the candidates I've seen over the past four years all have been trying to do the same thing. I think too much of the campaigning is done simply to try to get people to remember a candidate's name. That's evident in the chalkings, signs and T-shirts that were all over campus last week.

While I think it's important that a person know the candidates' names, I think it's more important that voters be familiar with the way candidates stand on certain issues. I think the Collegian has been doing a good job of interviewing candidates and keeping the students informed, but I think there's more that should be done because most students still don't know enough about each candidate to make an educated choice.

This is why I think that campus debates should be brought to the voters, instead of voters having to be brought to the debate.

First, I think K-State should use its radio station and public access TV channel to broadcast the debates so students can listen without having to make the effort of going out to the debate. I went to both debates this semester, and I would say that the 80 total people in attendance for both debates combined were well-informed about the candidates and their platforms, ideas, etc. If we broadcast the debates using the campus radio station and public access TV station, we could reach so many more people. I think this would ignite the spark that would get people geared up about voting. If the students were better informed, I'm sure they would care more about the outcome of the election.

My second idea is to eliminate the inconvenience of voting. Right now, students have to wait in line and then fill out a voting ballot. This is next to impossible when there are only 10 minutes to spare between classes. It's hard to vote when you barely have time to power-walk clear across campus anyway. My solution? It's simple. I think voters should receive their ballots in the mail a few days before the election. They could fill in the little circles at their leisure and then just drop the ballot off between classes. This makes voting much more convenient for students who are always on the go.

The ballot could have the student's name and identification number on the top, and a bubble sheet could be below that. We could separate the two with a perforation, which would make the forms detachable. Just show a student ID matching the top of the ballot, then detach the name and ID number from the ballot and turn it in. This would keep the way each person votes a secret but still make it more convenient for voters.

Hopefully, you can recognize that the system we are using now is not getting the job done. I think that anytime we can make students more informed about the candidates and can make voting easier, then we should take that opportunity. I think my ideas, if implemented, would make voters much more knowledgeable and make voting much more convenient for students.

Evolution, creationism debate should be absent from class

TOM CLARKE

What makes the creationist tick? What inspires a person to ignore hundreds of years of accumulated research and learning to devote themselves to the propagation of a dust-laden mythology? Why, in fact, would someone become so worked up about such an esoteric subject as the origin of species that they would invest valuable time and energy into ensuring that their own version is the one that everyone hears?

The last is a somewhat ironic question. After all, I did take time out of my busy schedule a few months back to attend the board of education hearings on the science curriculum in order to make sure a voice supporting the teaching of evolution was in the audience. When I heard that at a previous board hearing in Salina some lone advocate of the evolutionary theory was shouted down by an enraged mass of Bible literalists, I felt the school board should be made aware of the aforementioned 150 years of papers, books, studies and just plain basic research that has time and again supported the idea that living things evolve and have been evolving for almost a billion years.

I went to the Topeka hearings looking for a scrap — I admit it. Never having been in as religious a part of the world as Kansas, I actually was eager to see a living breathing creationist in the flesh. Alas, it was not to be. After some 50 scientists, teachers and ministers stood up to speak for the continuing presence of evolution in the biology classroom, a lone creationist struggled to the stand, quickly waffled something about equal time, and then fled to the comfort and obscurity of the crowded entranceway. After this rather disappointing display by the forces of ignorance, it was not surprising that the Kansas Board of Education opted to keep evolution in the science curriculum.

Still, it is unsettling that such an antediluvian theory as special creation still could be skulking around in the American psyche. Part of it, I suppose, is a general lack of education about what evolution actually is or is not. Public school students get little enough exposure to the theory, with many states having high school biology as only an optional course. To make matters worse, the teaching of evolution regularly is watered down or omitted from those high school classrooms that do ostensibly cover the subject of biology. In some regions, it's the result of the single-issue family-values candidate on the school board who decides evolution is a subject children just shouldn't be exposed to. In others, it's a more indirect process, as many textbook publishers remove all material that could be deemed controversial by a potential customer.

So what exactly is evolution being replaced with? Surprisingly, many people who profess a doubt about the theory of evolution haven't really thought through what the so-called Creation Scientists are offering in its place. While evolution is based around the idea that natural processes and a good deal of time are all that is required to turn organism A into organism B, the idea of special creation holds that to get any significant change among species you have to have a deity mucking about in the works. As if this divine interference was not enough, if you ask a creationist point blank exactly which god is to blame, he or she will tell you it isn't just any god, it's their God, and everything is explained rather neatly in this book of his known as the Old Testament, in that section titled Genesis.

The problem, however, is that it takes a disciplined ignorance of reality to believe seriously that every word written in the Bible is literally true, particularly in those sections that attempt to explain natural phenomena. According to the Bible, light was formed on the first day but the sun and stars didn't appear until day four. Was light just coming from everywhere until the sun was popped into the sky? According to the Bible, the universe was created only 6000 years ago.

Right off the bat I can think of three significant civilizations with a recorded history that goes back before 4000 B.C. Why is it they never mentioned seeing a God hustling the universe together in a six-day spurt? Adam and Eve are supposedly the progenitors of the human race, and yet their son Cain had no trouble finding a wife and founding a city when he got kicked out of Eden. Was God having a few other creations on the side?

Fortunately, it is only a minority of Christians who ascribe to such a literal interpretation of the Bible. Most consider Genesis to be somewhere between inspired allegory and ancient Hebrew mythology. Still, it is because evolution contradicts the Bible that the creationists are so fanatically dead-set against it. They believe if people start thinking the Bible is wrong when it comes to the origin of species, they will start wondering if it's wrong in other places as well.

If people start doubting the Bible, they might start thinking for themselves on moral questions and coming to conclusions based on observation and experience, instead of relying upon an archaic set of divine rules handed down to nomadic shepherds. The next thing you know, creationists say, people are chucking their Bibles into the river and partying till dawn in the streets.

Because of this misplaced fear of social disorder, schools are turning out children with little concept of evolution — the fundamental basis behind all modern thinking in biology — but who are well-versed with a hodge-podge of ancient beliefs passed off as scientific fact. All so a small minority of Bible literalists can dictate the thinking of the vast majority of moderate Christian and non-Christian students.

Whatever virtues the Bible might hold, its place in the classroom is in a comparative-religions course. It does not belong in the science curriculum.

K-State groups assist highway clean-up crews

By JINA HIPPE
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Nearly 2,000 different groups participate in the Adopt-A-Highway program in Kansas. Of those, 21 are K-State student organizations.

One of these groups, the FarmHouse fraternity, cleans a section of the highway east of Manhattan on Interstate 70.

"It's just one of the many community service projects that we participate in every year," Jim Gaither, sophomore in agricultural economics, said.

Gaither said the Adopt-A-Highway program is not a time-consuming project, and it helps to get FarmHouse members together.

"It's hard for us to do something as a whole chapter, because there are so many of us and we have different things going on," Gaither said. "This is something that requires a lot of people, and it gets everybody together working towards one goal."

Silver Key Sophomore Honorary cleans a section of Kansas Highway 24 between Manhattan and Wamego.

Ben Hopper, sophomore in agricultural journalism and political science, said the program is one of Silver Key's community service projects.

"We are a service organization, and it is one of the projects we participate in to diversify all the community service projects that we do," he said.

Hopper said Silver Key has fun participating in the Adopt-A-Highway program.

"We try to get all the members involved," he said. "It goes a lot faster with more people involved."

The Adopt-A-Highway program is something noticeable within the community, and it benefits both the community and the environment, Hopper said.

Kim Athon, information specialist for the Kansas Department of Transportation, said groups participating in the Adopt-A-Highway program sign a two-year contract for a two-mile stretch of highway. Groups are asked to pick up trash three times a year.

"This is not a huge time commitment," she said. "It only takes a couple of hours, and it is such a big benefit to everyone."

Athon said all highways in Kansas can be adopted, except for some areas that are excluded for safety reasons.

If a section of the highway is not adopted, the highway maintenance crews clean them when they have time, she said.

"Their number one priority is maintaining the roadways and keeping them safe," Athon said. "They usually don't have much time to pick up trash along the highway."

She said the Adopt-A-Highway program does not cost anything to the groups participating.

"KDOT provides all the supplies, like safety vests and trash bags," Athon said. "We also give the group a sign saying that particular section of the highway is adopted by that group."

She said she encourages groups to get involved in the program.

"Everyone should participate in the program because they are saving the state tax dollars, and they are making the community clean," Athon said.

Alumnus earns poetry award, $20,000 grant

Peace Corps experience inspires K-State graduate

By REED DUNN
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Ten years ago, he was winning some of the most prestigious awards within the K-State Department of English. His knack for creative writing now has landed him a $20,000 grant.

Derik Burleson graduated from K-State in 1990 with a master's degree in English and an emphasis in creative writing and poetry.

He said he never knew at the time that he would win a National Endowment for the Arts creative writing fellowship in poetry.

"Winning a fellowship at K-State would make my avocation my vocation, my job," Burleson said.

Among the many honors he obtained while a K-State student, Burleson was named the Best Graduate Student in English and won awards for poetry, short fiction and critical essays.

Burleson entered the NEA contest in March 1998 and was told he had won one of the 40 grants just before Christmas. He said there were about 940 entries in the contest.

"It was kind of a Christmas present," Burleson said.

Clips gathered for his entry to the contest came from a collection of his work, including many poems from his Peace Corps experiences.

Upon graduation from K-State, Burleson and his new wife, Anita, decided to join the Peace Corps after they were married.

"Anita had dreamed of, ever since she was a child, to join the Peace Corps," Burleson said. "We decided to get married and join thereafter."

The couple were placed in Africa, where they met and became good friends with Roger Remera.

"He basically was our best friend while we were there," Burleson said. "His family sort of adopted us."

After about a year and eight months, they were forced back to the United States due to war.

Burleson said the genocide that forced them out of Africa brought some of the most powerful poems to his manuscript.

He and his wife experienced the loss of many friends, including the death of Remera's family and the near loss of Remera himself.

Since then, Remera has moved in with Burleson and his wife at their home in Houston.

He has been living with them for the past few years, attending the University of Houston.

Burleson also is attending the University of Houston, where he is working on his doctorate in creative writing and literature.

Jonathan Holden, distinguished professor of English, was Burleson's academic adviser during his time at K-State.

Holden said he remembers Burleson being dedicated to his work.

"He was unusually smart and determined and courageous, as well as being talented," Holden said.

Holden said he thinks Burleson's poetry about his African experiences probably won him the endowment award.

"To be a poet as good as Derick, pure talent is not enough," Holden said. "He went out and lived life, a lot of life."

Elizabeth Dodd, associate professor of English, said Burleson was in one of her classes during her first semester at K-State.

"As a writer, he continues to grow and change," Dodd said. "He was a wonderful narrative poet when he was here and has since gone on to a more meditative work."

The $20,000 grant accompanying the honor will be divided for the next two years and is intended to help the recipient write poetry.

"I plan to take this summer off to work on finishing this collection of poems, and work on new poems as well," Burleson said.

The April 9 Collegian will provide an excellent opportunity for you to reach prospective students and their parents. Inform them of the unique opportunities available at K-State. Additionally, you can inform the public of the academic programs available and facilitate career exploration for currently enrolled K-State students.

Over 25,000 people are expected to attend Saturday's activities.

We will be printing 3,000 extra copies of the Collegian and distributing them on Saturday, April 10.

If you would like to advertise, contact

K-State football receiver Aaron Lockett decided to tie on some track shoes this year and compete with athletes on a different playing field. The football All-American earned a provisional qualifying mark for the NCAA track meet but didn't quite make it at the end of the season. Lockett, who competed in both football and track in high school, said he thinks it takes a lot of competitiveness and heart to compete in any sport.

JILL JARSULIC/KANSAS STATE COLLEGE

SEEING the other SIDE

Lockett tackles track in addition to football

Aaron Lockett didn't think football was enough. In his second year at K-State, Lockett added another sport — track.

He played one year for Wildcat football, earning freshman All-America honors with his 928 receiving yards, second on the team. Lockett also broke the school record with 21.1 yards per reception and was on the receiving end of the longest pass play in K-State history.

Lockett had experience in high school track and wanted to test his speed against the nation's best sprinters. So the 5-foot-7-inch wide receiver ran indoor track this year, training with both the track team and the football team.

"Football was a must. I went to track practice after that so I had two workouts a day," Lockett said. "It was rough — I think my body pays for it. I'm not sure I could do that for a long-term basis, but for the short amount of time I had to do it I was able to maintain it."

Lockett said he tried to take the season a week at a time to improve gradually. He just missed his goal of making it to the NCAA meet. Lockett earned an NCAA provisional qualifying mark in the 55 meter dash, but his speed didn't make the cut at the end of the season.

He ran track and played football his entire four years in high school, winning first place in state track in the 100-meter dash his senior year. Track coach Cliff Rovelto said the ability to compete at Lockett's level in two sports is rare.

"Only guys that are as gifted as Aaron can do that — the guys that if they're better at football are going to play in the NFL on Sundays, if they're track guys, they're the kind who are capable of making the finals in a national championship," Rovelto said.

Lockett said the key difference between track and football is the lack of protective gear in track, although he said he believes track is harder overall on his body.

Rovelto said the combination also challenges the coaches because they are limited in what can be done with training.

"It's difficult, because you're constantly having to compromise what you would ideally do with an athlete like him," Rovelto said.

So what makes an athlete want to go to all the trouble? Lockett said his success in high school led him to believe he should continue in college.

"It gives me the opportunity to maintain speed at a high level, gives me extra confidence to know that it can be done as far as running," Lockett said. "I think it takes natural athletic ability to do any sport, but I also think it takes a lot of competitiveness and heart."

Lockett faces football opponents on the track, giving him a chance to see how he measures up. Comparing field to field, Rovelto said track forces the athlete to have few to no weaknesses, while football teams can compensate for weakness.

"In track, there's no pretenders — you either got at it or you don't," Rovelto said. "In football, I think any coach will tell you you can hide weaknesses a little bit. In track, if you're lining up against another guy and you're weaker, you're going to get beat and there's not a dang thing you can do about it."

Football is Lockett's first concern, he said, and track helps him to develop his athleticism. Rovelto said this combination of sports can help him in both overall.

"Psychologically, I think a guy like him probably benefits when he lines up against those guys on the track," he said. "He ran against a couple Colorado starters, and since he's competed against them on the football field he knows what kind of athletes they are, so he's going to be less apt to be intimidated by them."

"By the same token, the fact that he's lined up against them on the track and beaten them on the track, I'm sure that makes him a lot more confident when he lines up against them on the football field."

Returning 'Cats ready for season

By MIKE VIETTI
KANSAS STATE COLLEGE

Before the 1999 season began, the K-State baseball team suffered a blow more damaging than starting without a true home field when two team members were involved in an alcohol-related car accident.

The accident left senior Andy Silva in the hospital and junior Travis Andre' on suspension from the team.

Silva, who was returning to the team as an outfielder and pitcher after leading the Big 12 in saves last season, was expected to miss the first five or six weeks while he received treatment for his injuries.

Andre', a transfer from the University of Florida, was expected to be in competition for a starting spot at third base.

Both have returned and are now contributing to a Wildcat team that could have used their experience earlier in the year.

"After the accident, I felt like there were people who thought that I had let them down," said Andre', who has started at both third base and as designated hitter for the Cats.

"There were things that I could have done to add to the success of this team. Having to sit out and not do my part — that was really tough."

Since debuting three weeks ago as a Wildcat against Baylor, Andre' has compiled a .387 batting average and a .472 on-base percentage.

"Travis is swinging the bat extremely well right now," head coach Mike Clark said. "He worked very hard during his down time, and I think his preparation has allowed him to come back and be successful right away."

For Silva, a second-team Big 12 selection as a closer last year, the disappointment of not being able to start his senior season on schedule was tough.

"Not being able to play at the start of the year really ate me up inside," Silva said. "I was in the best shape I had ever been in before the accident, but I just had to deal with it."

Sitting out the first 10 games of the season was an entirely new experience for Silva. Since he began playing tee-ball as a youngster, Silva said he has never had to miss any part of any baseball season.

At the plate, Silva has struggled to regain his form from last year, when he was the Cats' primary lead-off hitter with a .291 average. So far, Silva is hitting .222 with a .361 on-base percentage. He has only pitched once so far, pitching the ninth inning in the Cats' 12-2 loss to Texas on Sunday. Silva allowed one hit while striking out one batter.

"Andy has struggled a little offensively," Clark said. "But he is really coming on right now. He can really help us out with his aggressiveness and his speed."

"From the mound, his stuff was very good last weekend," Clark said. "Having him back pitching is going to help us a great deal."

Both Silva and Andre' said they would like to put the beginning stages of this season behind them as they look forward to improving themselves constantly to help the Wildcats compete for a spot in the Big 12 Tournament at the end of the season.

"I can always get better in every aspect," Silva said. "You just have to refine your tools. Improving the little details will help me the most."

"I'm playing better now than I thought I would," Andre' said. "I just hope that it keeps going and that I will contribute in a positive way the rest of the season."

NFL votes to reinstate instant replay for 1999

By DAVE GOLDBERG
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

PHOENIX — Upon further and further review, instant replay is back in the NFL for the 1999 season.

The league's owners, who had killed replay every year for the last seven years, overwhelmingly approved a new system Wednesday that will give coaches two challenges per game, with a replay assistant to determine if something is to be reviewed in the final two minutes of each half.

The referee on the field will make the final decision.

Unlike the system in effect from 1986-1991, it is not intended to cover routine mistakes.

"We are implementing this system to correct the major, major, big mistake," said Seattle coach Mike Holmgren, co-chairman of the competition committee, which came up with the plan.

The action comes after a season marked by several high-profile mistakes that even led commissioner Paul Tagliabue to propose bringing instant replay back for the playoffs, a move that was turned down.

Wednesday's vote was 28-3, the most overwhelming vote for replay since it first came up in 1986. The three "no" votes came from Cincinnati, the New York Jets and Arizona, while the New York Giants, who had voted against it every year, were among the "yes" votes.

That was the reason why replay wasn't put in for more than one year.

"There were several teams that were traditionally against it that voted for it this time," said the other co-chairman, Rich McKay of Tampa Bay, another team that often was against replay.

"They wanted to see how it works for a year before we put it in for a longer period."

Under the system to be used, coaches will have to act in the 40 seconds between the time a play ends and the ball is put back into play again to make the challenge. All said they would rely on word from an assistant upstairs.

"That won't be a problem," Holmgren said. "We always get five voices at once shouting, 'Yell at someone!'"

The referee on the field then will review the play. If he turns down the challenge, the team making it will lose a timeout. If he upholds the challenge, the team will retain the timeout.

In the final two minutes of each half, the replay assistant — probably a retired official — will stop the game if he sees a call that might be challenged, and the same procedure will be followed. The replay assistant's challenge will extend into any overtime.

"There will be a lot of strategy for us to think about," said Wade Phillips of Buffalo, one of the teams hurt most last season by calls that later were found to be incorrect.

"We are implementing this system to correct the major, major, big mistake."

Bracket cheaters uncovered during surprising 'March Madness' tournament

MIKE VIETTI

Please don't get suckered into believing this is just another run-of-the-mill NCAA Tournament column from a writer who is going to give fans insight into which teams will advance to the Elite Eight starting today.

If you normally read my columns, shame on you if you thought I would present any kind of rational information. If you usually don't read my columns, you are in the definite majority, and it is important for you to realize now and for future readings (God willing) that I know next to nothing about everything.

However, one of the things I do know is that the NCAA Tournament brings out the most deceiving, cunning, sinister and sly beings on this planet.

If you have ever in your entire life filled out a NCAA Tournament bracket, whether for fun, or ... well, fun (office pools are illegal and I wouldn't dream of advocating them), then you know who I am speaking of.

Picture this: I'm sitting around watching Oklahoma pulverize UNC-Charlotte on Sunday when a friend stops by to share his thoughts on the tourney.

Me: Hey, how's your bracket looking?
Friend: Oh, I forgot to fill one out.
Me: Lucky you — my bracket has gone to hell.

Friend: (looks at my bracket) I can't believe you didn't have Gonzaga in the Sweet Sixteen. Ha! You didn't have Miami or Ohio in there either. My Lord, you didn't even have Weber State beating North Carolina. I hope you didn't get into any pools with this piece-of-crap bracket.

Me: Of course not, entering pools is illegal. Did you write any of those picks down yourself, like Detroit beating UCLA for instance?

Friend: No, but I knew each of those teams was going to win. I can't believe no one else saw those upsets coming.

Me: Yeah, you're right. I should have seen an obscure team from Utah, such as Weber State, defeating one of the most storied teams in the history of college basketball like North Carolina.

Friend: No kidding. I saw it a mile away.

After hearing all of his blatant lies, I decapitated him and threw his corpse outside, thinking an escaped bison might eat it.

I just don't see how these people can live with themselves. Next to fair-weather fans, these scumbags are the worst people on the earth. Everybody knows at least one person who does that kind of thing every year. Usually, it's the same person over and over again.

I also have found that a majority of these liars are also fair-weather fans, but I'll save that for another time.

Is it really that hard to take five minutes out of your day to sit down and fill out a bracket? Pick all the stupid upsets you want; at least then you would have them written down on paper and could prove you weren't lying.

Of course, there are those people who fill out a bracket, decide that it isn't good when they've lost all four Final Four teams after the first two rounds and come up with another totally new bracket that is full of all the right picks.

Here's a fascinating true story: A friend of mine told me that a few years back, his dad entered into an office pool for a few bucks, despite the fact that they are illegal and punishable by a severe fine.

Anyway, one of his dad's co-workers compiled an absolutely terrible bracket and basically had lost already after the second round. So, what does this guy do?

He sneaks into the chairman of the pool's office while he was out and slides into place a totally new bracket and subsequently won the pool, which was in the neighborhood of a hundred bucks.

My friend's dad found out when the dastardly person 'fessed up around tourney time the following year.

So, what can we all learn from this?

Never trust anyone! Make at least two copies of everyone's bracket and keep one of the copies in a secret hidden place. That way, you can compare everyone's final bracket they present at the end of the tournament to the copy they handed to you at the beginning of the tournament.

We live in a terrible society of murderers, arsonists and presidents who like interns a little too much.

Do we really need to have NCAA Tournament bracket forgers too? I think not. It's time to catch these losers in their lies and make America a better place to live in.

Is that too much to ask?

Jeremy Claeys is the new station manager of the campus radio station, KSDB-FM 91.9, which is now on the Internet. Visitors can listen to what's on the air and find information on upcoming concerts and events.

Online Wildcat 91.9

STORY BY CORBIN H. CRABLE ■ PHOTOGRAPH BY JEFF COOPER

KSDB-FM 91.9 isn't just on the radio any more.

Listeners can visit Wildcat 91.9's new World Wide Web site at wildcatradio.ksu.edu, where they not only can listen to what is on air but also get information on upcoming concerts and events. Visitors to the site also can check out a list of the 10 most-requested songs for the week on KSDB.

The site was designed and donated by GenX Web Services, and Flint Hills Internet Services is its host.

"We donated the site as a way to give something back to the school," said Joe Baumgartner, co-founder of the Web site and partner in GenX Web Services. "It's all a part of giving the radio station a new face. It's part of their new look and attitude."

Jeremy Claeys, program director of Wildcat 91.9, said information for placing announcements on the Web site is also available.

"Campus organizations can get prices for our underwriting announcements, as well as area businesses," he said.

The station's programming schedule can be found on the site, as well as the topics of the day for the station's talk shows and a calendar of events that is updated every other day.

However, the Web site's crowning achievement, Claeys said, was the ability for the radio station to broadcast via the World Wide Web.

"Our live audio feed is the backbone of our site," he said. "Everyone is able to listen to our radio station over the Internet."

Claeys said a new target audience for the station is K-State alumni.

"Something we are going to be working on over the next couple of months is getting more alumni to listen to the station, since we are now broadcasting over the Internet," he said. "This is the only place where alumni can listen to sporting events that aren't broadcast on TV or anywhere else."

The site will include information on how K-State alumni can help fund the station with donations.

"We do rely heavily, though, on privilege fees, the School of Journalism and the College of Arts and Sciences," Claeys said.

Besides this, he said, a large part of the revenue for the Web site has come from payments for the underwriting announcements from various organizations.

As for what the future holds, Claeys said other plans for the Web site include developing a message board and a pictorial tour of the radio station itself.

"This will include a tour of the station and photos of our staff members," he said. "The tour will show there's a lot more behind-the-scenes stuff going on than you'd think."

Claeys said the tour feature will be completed by the middle of April.

Also in the works is a concert ticket giveaway that only can be entered online.

Adding this feature, Claeys said, hopefully would bring more visitors to the site.

Ultimately, though, he said he hopes for the site to become just as well-known as the radio station.

"By the end of the semester, we want to be known as comparable to the station," Claeys said.

Relationship problems focus of Masque play

By DIANA LEE
KANSAS STATE COLLEGE

When two old friends reunite, they discover it is not always easy to communicate effectively.

"In the Business at Hand," a one-act play by Martha Boesing, showcases a man and a woman who find themselves unable to communicate properly and end up crossing boundaries in their relationship. The play will be presented by KSU Lunchbag Theatre at 11:30 a.m. Thursday in the Purple Masque Theatre.

Lew Shelton, associate professor of speech communication, theater and dance, said the experience between these two friends is a case of crossing emotional boundaries.

"The woman's experience is one of him saying 'tell me what you really feel' or 'tell me what you really want,' and sometimes people don't really want to know," he said. "This woman goes out on a limb and reveals more than the guy can handle."

Donna Davenport, senior in speech communication, theater and dance, is one of the actors participating. She said she thought original aspects of the play make it fun to participate in and to watch.

"It should be a lot of fun because it's a great script and incorporates spoken stage directions and inner monologue," she said.

"I think it was really a fluke that he found such a great script that fits our needs for Lunchbag."

Shelton said spoken inner monologue is a tool with which a number of playwrights have experimented.

"I think, in some respects, this technique is used to try to reveal characters in a different way," he said. "Eugene O'Neill used this technique in the 1920s in 'Strange Interlude.'"

Shelton said O'Neill's characters speak subconscious thoughts, but staging this became a big dilemma because no one knew what to do with the other characters while one spoke four or five lines of inner monologue.

"They only speak short phrases in this play, though, so it isn't as much of a dilemma in this one," he said.

Shelton also said he thought the actors seemed to have trouble getting into the spoken inner thoughts and stage directions at first.

"It really had them thrown at first, but once they got into it and saw what it meant and saw the potential it held, they got into it and really enjoyed it," he said.

Shelton said both actors are good at naturalistic acting, but voicing the stage directions is quite theatrical.

"It is an interesting combination of actors and their talents and the theatrical way in which the play is written," he said. "It's something that is going to play very well."

'The Corruptor' lacks plot

By RYAN DOOM
KANSAS STATE COLLEGE

If there was ever a formula that Hollywood loves to use over and over again, it is the police-buddy movie scenario.

You know the story: two very different police officers from different sides of the tracks come together as the most unlikely partners. They hate each other at first, then, well, you get the idea.

"The Corruptor" is the latest film to throw its hat into the ring and have a turn at the formula. Asian superstar Chow Yun-Fat ("The Replacement Killers") stars as Chinatown cop Nick Chen. After crime gets to be too bad in Chen's district, a rookie police officer, Danny Wallace (Mark Wahlberg), is assigned to Chen's squad. Its basic mission is to stop a Chinese gang war. The bad news is that the leader (Ric Young) has a police officer on his payroll: Chen.

"The Corruptor" is a movie that looks better in those slick, well-produced 30-second trailers. There is no real drama or characters that you like here. The promising story begins to develop, then disappears after a few minutes. It is almost like the director was making it up as he went along.

One of the worst aspects of the film is the acting. Of course, you wouldn't think this type of movie would be an Oscar contender, but it would be nice at least to have made it believable.

After making more than 70 movies in Asia, it would seem that Yun-Fat would be interesting to watch, and he is interesting as long as he has a gun in his hand and is not speaking.

One thing that is hard to understand is why Mark Wahlberg ("Boogie Nights") now is trying to be an action star. Throughout the movie, Wahlberg never looks comfortable in the role. He comes off looking like a scared little boy in a man's body.

What the movie does have is what you would expect, including exciting chase scenes and riveting gun play, which is what Yun-Fat is known for. The first time we see Yun-Fat, he leaves his mark after taking out a handful of gangsters. With guns blazing and bullets whizzing, the movie opens with promise. Once there is an attempt to establish the story, the promise fades.

"The Corruptor" is not the worst film of the year, but it is nowhere near the top.

This is the type of movie that you would see only if you missed your daily dose of violence and then some.

Four Amish teen-agers arrested in rampage

HAZLETON, Iowa — Four Amish teen-agers were arrested for smashing 44 windows and overturning buggies during a rampage at the home of an Amish farmer, authorities said.

At least three people cowered inside the home of Roman Raber as the teens were causing the damage, sheriff's deputy Glen Fuhs said.

The youths apparently suspected Raber had called county deputies to report they had been drinking on the property earlier that evening, Deputy Jeff Coleman said. Deputies had issued numerous alcohol-related citations in the earlier incident.

"They trashed the farm," Fuhs said.

As many as 40 youths were on the property late Sunday and early Monday, having lingered there following prayer services for the adults. Only a handful participated in the vandalism in this quiet Amish community about 50 miles north of Cedar Rapids.

Raber doesn't have a phone and said he didn't summon the authorities.

"It was frightful, very frightful to see the intent to terrorize us," Raber said. "Most didn't do anything — they thought it was terrible."

More arrests are pending. Authorities said they didn't know whether the four arrested had been drinking.

Wednesday's performances were part of 19 performances in the Kansas and Missouri area.

"We are half done," Sonny Wells, the Daniels' coordinator, said. "We have 14 schools and five evening programs in five days. Now that is a busy schedule."

He said the group had the opportunity to make it out to Fort Riley this year after a failed attempt last year.

"They wanted to get us out here last year, and fly us out on a helicopter, but the missus wouldn't go for it," he said.

This year the group was brought in by Fort Riley and the U.S. Cavalry Museum.

more students.

The plan endorsed by the Senate committee would abolish the present Board of Regents and reconstitute a board of the same name and size.

The nine-member board would be divided into three commissions of three members each, one to govern the six state universities, one to supervise and coordinate activities of the 19 community colleges and 11 vocational-technical schools, and one to handle coordination activities among all post-secondary schools, including Washburn.

The bill would take effect on July 1, when the governor would reappoint present members or new members to the reconstituted board.

Committee endorsement of the bill, 8-3, followed lengthy discussion on whether it ought to contain a sunset provision to force the Legislature to review in four years how the structure was working and whether the three commissions should be abolished and the new board allowed to create its own committees.

The proposal lost on a voice vote.

Also defeated, 7-3, was a motion by Sen. Dwayne Umbarger, R-Thayer, to require that no more than three members of the revamped board hold degrees from the same Kansas institution. Only Sens. Laurie Bleeker, R-Great Bend, and Janis Lee, D-Kensington, voted with Umbarger.

Umbarger said he was attempting to calm fears of community colleges and vocational-technical schools that there could be bias against them if the new Board of Regents was dominated by graduates of the universities.

Seven of the nine current members of the Board of Regents hold degrees from the University of Kansas.

The committee amended the bill to add a provision to create a bonus program to reward institutions for meeting goals. Tanner said the House would accept that plan.

KOSOVO

Wednesday, he said the report "bolsters what I said" back in January.

A commentary on Serbian state-run television said Ranta "simply did not have the strength to specifically deny the earlier claims of massacre by William Walker."

The Yugoslav forensic team that also examined the Racak victims said an important test to determine whether they had been carrying arms was not performed — something Ranta also acknowledged to reporters on Wednesday.

More than any other single incident, it was the Jan. 15 killings of at least 45 ethnic Albanians in Racak, a village 25 miles southwest of Pristina, that galvanized international support for U.S.-led peace efforts.

Numerous elderly men and a woman were among the victims, the pathologists confirmed.

The report concluded that at least 40 of the victims — the team did not get access to five others — were unarmed civilians who were killed at about the same time.

Twenty-two victims, discovered by monitors in a gully on a hill overlooking the village, were most likely shot where they were found, and there was no evidence they had used firearms, the report said.

In Wednesday's only report of fighting, the Serb-run Media Center said rebels attacked an army border patrol west of Djakovica and Yugoslav forces returned fire, dispersing the guerrillas and heading in pursuit of them.

International officials gave varying reports of the people fleeing the fighting — between 1,000 and 7,000.

Prieto said he thought the final day of campaigning got out of control.

"After a while, it got kind of ridiculous," he said. "If it comes down to winning at any cost, we don't want any part."

Chris and I knew we weren't going to go to that level to win. It's not like we're trying to make a big deal. We feel like the system kind of let us down."

Ashley said he hopes revisions to the system next year will cut down on the number of infractions.

Right now, the same complaint forms are used for petty complaints like sidewalk chalk on overhangs as for significant violations like illegal contributions and overspending.

"We hope to set up a small-claims process so that no hearing process will be needed for small stuff and we can get it in and out," Ashley said.

He said the number of people who voted in the general election was slightly less than 2,900, and the turnout was 2,335 in the runoff election.

"Voter turnout was lower than last year, but there weren't huge issues driving the elections, so I was disappointed, but not too much," he said.

"If it comes down to winning at any cost, we don't want any part."

North Manhattan Avenue to get face-lift

By BRIAN HERNANDEZ
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Both the east and south sides of K-State's campus will be riddled with construction this summer as the city of Manhattan begins improvements along North Manhattan Avenue.

The three-phase project will stretch from Bluemont Avenue to the Claflin Road and Pioneer Lane intersection and is scheduled to begin in either June or July, Jerry Petty, director of public works, said.

The first phase of the project will consist of the repaving and restriping of North Manhattan Avenue. The roadway will be reduced from its current four lanes to three as one lane of through traffic will be constructed on each side with a turn lane down the middle. Bike lanes will be added along each side of Vehicular, bicycle, pedestrian safety improvements to be done by August the avenue.

Enhancements to all the pedestrian crossings, along with the construction of a new sidewalk on the east side, will complete the first phase, which is scheduled to be finished in August at a cost of nearly $200,000.

Phase two will be an intersection improvement at North Manhattan and Claflin-Pioneer. The intersection will be lined up with the phase one improvements, and a new traffic signal will be installed.

Phase two is scheduled to begin in summer 2000.

The city was awarded a Kansas

Department of Transportation grant for phase two of the project. KDOT is responsible for 90 percent of the cost, while the city of Manhattan is responsible for the remaining 10 percent.

The third and final phase of the project will be a concept study of the North Manhattan corridor. The city will monitor the improved roadway and determine if any other improvements will be necessary to increase pedestrian safety in the immediate future.

Petty said the beginning of the third phase would be determined at a later date based upon funding.

The city is in the process of finding a constructor for the project, and Petty said the bid phase would begin in either April or May for phase one. Phase two bids will be accepted sometime this fall.

TransSystems Corporation, of Kansas City, Mo., is consulting the city on the project. Todd Thalmann, project manager, said the primary reason for the improvements is to enhance the safety of vehicular, bicycle and pedestrian traffic along North Manhattan quickly before students return for the fall semester in August.

Petty said North Manhattan has been in need of change for safety reasons for quite some time.

"Our primary effort along Manhattan Avenue is for the safety of the pedestrians," he said. "At the same time, this project allows vehicular traffic to get where they need to go without jeopardizing the safety of pedestrians."

IOC expels members for bribery

By STEPHEN WILSON
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LAUSANNE, Switzerland — One by one, the six accused International Olympic Committee members filed into a conference hall Wednesday and pleaded their case before their peers.

Some 90 minutes later, in what delegates described as a "painful and harrowing" exercise, all six were expelled.

The IOC completed an unprecedented purge of its own ranks, and then backed president Juan Antonio Samaranch with an overwhelming vote of confidence and two rousing ovations during a special session wrought by the worst scandal in its 105-year history.

Despite the support, Samaranch hinted he might leave office before the end of his term in 2001.

A total of 10 members have been banished or have resigned after being linked to $1.2 million in cash payments and other vote-buying inducements from Salt Lake City's winning bid for the 2002 Winter Games. Ten others have been censured or warned about their actions.

Olympic leaders said the expulsions marked a significant turn in restoring the agency's credibility and the luster of the five rings.

A leading U.S. congressional critic wasn't completely satisfied.

"Expelling members does nothing to address the utter lack of transparency and accountability in IOC processes," Sen. John McCain, R-Ariz., said. "What we must see are concrete reforms."

Samaranch and his deputies said the house-cleaning was just the beginning and that the IOC would carry out long-term changes.

"We're nearing the end of the beginning," said IOC vice president Dick Pound, echoing Winston Churchill.

Privilege fees stay same due to high enrollment

By JENNIFER RYAN
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Privilege fees will remain at the same level for the third time in the past decade due to an increase in enrollment.

"An increase in enrollment means there will be more revenue to allocate to privilege fee requests," Privilege Fee Committee Chair Jeff Meder said.

This is the second year in a row that privilege fees have not gone up, but the third year they have stayed at $251 for a student enrolled in 12 credit hours.

The fees stand at $64 for the first credit hour and $17 for each additional hour. The total privilege fee budget will increase by only $26,655 next year due to increased enrollment, Meder said.

The committee granted three emergency requests, by KSDB-FM 91.9, Office of Student Activities and K-State Student Union, this semester. All of these were taken out of the reserves account.

"The reserves account for privilege fees has taken care of the emergency allocations," Architecture Sen. Ted Conrad said. "The KSDB increase will be paid out of the reserves as well."

Whether fees will increase next year will depend on the number of campus organizations and student services that request fees, Meder said.

Next year's committee will hear requests from the Fine Arts Council, the Office of Student Activities and Services, Educational Opportunity Fund, Student Activity Fee, the K-State Marching Band, Intercollegiate Athletics, Union Operations, Union Repair and Replacement, and Union Program Council, Meder said.

This year was also the first year that the Internal Auditing Office conducted audits for organizations receiving privilege fee money.

The audits give the committee a professional opinion on the effectiveness of students' moneys, Agriculture Sen. David Hendricks said.

"Auditing provides the Privilege Fee Committee with exact information on where student funds are being spent and not just having to rely on the administrators of the fee's budget," Hendricks said.

The library fee issue, however, remains unresolved.

A $369,000 request from Hale Library earlier this year might have raised fees had it passed, and the committee said next year's Student Senate will have to deal with the issue.

"I think the new Senate will continue the process of pushing a fee/tuition increase through at the state level," Conrad said. "I'm not convinced that they would be in support of a privilege fee, regardless of the potential state-level funding."

A resolution was sent to Senate requesting a state-student matching program to meet the needs of the library. The resolution was proposed to allocate funds to the library that wouldn't be considered a privilege.

"I am confident that it will result in a funding partnership with the state," Meder said.

Business Sen. Nick Mueeting said he feels the privilege fee is not correctly defined at K-State, and the library request was an example of this.

"I believe that privilege fees should be actual privileges. Not another way to provide resources because of shortfalls in budgets," Mueeting said.

"I hope next year Senate will continue to see library funding as an academic service and not a privilege," said Mueeting, who introduced legislation to define campus privilege fees at the March 11 Senate meeting.

A clear definition of a privilege fee might not decrease requests but might help committee members make their decisions, Mueeting said.

"If someone wants to use a privilege fee for non-privilege areas of the university, then they would need to use a new word, and redefine what is meant by the fee," Mueeting said.

A request by Career and Employment Services was denied funding earlier this month. Although the request wouldn't have raised overall fees, the denial could mean higher user fees for students who use Career and Employment Services.

"The privilege fee committee made a recommendation to modify the user-fee system instead of granting the request," said Tracey Fraser, director of Career and Employment Services. "I understand their rationale, but nothing is solidified yet."

Enrollment at K-State is expected to continue to increase, which might affect some services on-campus that use privilege fees, Tom Schellhardt, vice president of administration and finance, said.

"Some services will have more of an impact on their budget," Schellhardt said. "Increased enrollment means there will be a need for added funds. Especially services like Lafene Health Center, which needs more money as it helps more students."

Emergency requests could increase due to the effect of increased enrollment on services, Schellhardt said.

The emergency requests made this year might not have been granted if the reserve account had been smaller, Hendricks said.

"In my opinion, the KSDB emergency allocation would have been passed regardless, as the station was in such severe financial troubles," he said.

"The Union would probably have requested the needed funds in their regular fee request earlier rather than waiting for an emergency fee if we wouldn't have had such a large reserve account."

House approves concealed carry bill Thursday

By CARL MANNING
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — Even if the Legislature passes a bill to let Kansans carry hidden handguns, Gov. Bill Graves is expected to veto it. Supporters don't have enough votes to override a veto.

The House voted 76-48 Thursday to pass a bill that would allow citizens with clean records and proper training to be issued a four-year license to carry concealed handguns.

However, Graves vetoed a similar bill two years ago.

It takes 84 votes to override a veto in the House, and it's doubtful supporters of the bill could muster that number.

The bill goes to the Senate, where the Federal and State Affairs Committee will consider the measure next Thursday along with another House-passed bill to prevent local governments from suing gunmakers.

If the bill makes it to the chamber, Senate President Dick Bond, R-Overland Park, said it would be a close call as to whether it could pass.

Senate Majority Leader Tim Emert, R-Independence, said the concealed gun bill Graves vetoed passed the chamber 22-18, and he doesn't think the vote will change much.

Bond and Emert both said there is no way to muster the votes to override a veto by Graves.

The bill was pitched in the House as a measure to improve safety for Kansans, especially women, by making criminals think twice before attacking someone.

Critics said it puts more guns on the streets and results in more gun-related deaths and shootings. The bill would authorize the Kansas Bureau of Investigation to issue licenses allowing people to carry concealed handguns starting Jan. 1, 2000.

Applicants would have to be at least 21, complete a weapons safety and training course, and have no history of mental illness or drug or alcohol abuse in the previous five years. Applicants could not have any felony convictions or be subject to a restraining order.

By-laws amendment fails in Student Senate

By LAUREN POSLADEK
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Student Senate failed to pass on Thursday night a proposed by-laws amendment that would have combined the Student Affairs and Social Services Committee with the Communications Committee.

The Senate approved the motion to send the bill back to the Operations Committee for reconsideration.

If the bill had passed, the Student Affairs and Communications Committee would have been created to perform the tasks of the two current committees.

Because the bill was a proposal to amend the Student Governing Association by-laws, the bill needed two-thirds approval, 32 votes, to pass instead of a simple majority.

The proposed amendment received 30 votes for approval, two short of the two-thirds required for it to pass. Twelve senators voted against the bill.

Operations Committee Chair Joshua Rengstorff said the bill

Bill to merge two committees sent back for reconsideration went to the Operations Committee last semester. The committee researched the situation and looked at the goals for both committees. There were several similarities between the committees, and Rengstorff said the committees probably would be more effective if they were combined.

Senate Vice Chair Jake Worcester said the SASS Committee has not met this semester, and inactive Senate members cannot serve students as well as they should.

"We have a hard time serving students if we are on committees that don't meet frequently and don't take many projects," Worcester said. "We need a committee that works year-round, a committee that allows each and every senator a better chance to fulfill their potential. This bill allows us to reallocate these committee members to give them something to do year-round."

Arts and Sciences Sen. Kim Peschka said Student Senate must be willing to change its structure to provide more efficiency.

"Senate changes — it's time to move on and catch up with the times," Peschka said. "We're trying to get people involved in Senate, but they don't have anything to do. We want to see everyone working at 100 percent."

Other senators said they thought the combination would create too much work for the new committee and bring too many issues under one committee's responsibility.

"I just don't think SASS and Communications match," said Arts and Sciences Sen. Chris Crowder, current member of the SASS Committee. "The service part of SASS would blend with Communication's goals, but the safety part of the committee would conflict with most of the other issues Communications addresses," he said.

A motion to refer the bill back to the Operations Committee for reconsideration was passed. If the bill is not brought up by the committee at the next Senate meeting, which is the last meeting of the year, it will die, Worcester said.

The senate also passed a resolution requesting the Faculty Senate Calendar Committee to consider the possibility of scheduling a fall break in October.

In other business, 12 allocations for student organization funding were passed.

Revisions to the the funding statute also were introduced. One of the revisions would allow university organizations to request funding throughout the fiscal year. Proposals for funding now are due at the beginning of each semester.

German professor discusses benefits, physics of unconventional cancer treatment procedure

By CHRISTINE ROEGER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Not all cancer patients can be cured by conventional methods, said Gerhard Kraft, German biophysics professor, to 20 Department of Physics members Thursday.

He spoke on the rasterscan heavy ion method, which is different from other therapies used widely today. Conventional methods used in the United States include bombarding the tumor with rays of protons, surgery to remove the tumor, chemotherapy and gene therapy. The new method uses heavy carbon ions — charged particles — to target the tumor and destroy it uninvassively. The treatment was developed by a collaboration of German research teams.

"We don't want to replace successful treatment methods," Kraft said. "We are looking for those patients who cannot be treated by conventional methods."

Compared to the conventional proton therapy, the ion therapy shows an increase in biological efficiency. Using heavy ions allows doctors to target the diseased tissue more precisely, reducing damage of the healthy, surrounding tissue, Kraft said.

He said the rasterscan method points the beams with 1-millimeter accuracy to the diseased tissue.

Every year, there are 1 million new patients suffering from cancer, Kraft said.

Of all the new cancer patients, 58 percent develop a single tumor. Eighteen percent of patients with tumors that have not spread cannot be cured, he said. Kraft said the new rasterscan method might help about 6 percent of new cancer patients.

From 1993 to 1997, the research team, which combines researchers from the heavy ion national German lab and other research centers, such as the German Cancer Research Center in Heidelberg, constructed an improved heavy ion particle accelerator that was able to produce more focused heavy ion beams than any other accelerator now in use.

"We treated the first patient with the rasterscan method in November 1997," Kraft said.

Kraft and his team treated a patient with a brain tumor who was denied surgery by physicians because of the tumor's position. After treatment, the patient showed marked improvement, he said.

"We saw a very fast tumor regression," Kraft said. After six months of therapy, the tumor had disappeared, but Kraft said he was reserved about declaring a victory over the cancer.

"We cannot say that we cured the patient from cancer," he said. "It takes five years to guarantee that no further tumors occur."

So far, the rasterscan method shows fast tumor control with minimal complications, he said.

"We have low side effects with our cancer treatment method," he said. "There is no hair loss or skin irritation."

Most of the 32 patients who were treated with the rasterscan method have shown a fair degree of improvement.

Torre's prognosis excellent following cancer treatment

ST. LOUIS — The surgeon who removed Joe Torre's cancerous prostate gland Thursday said he believed the disease had not spread and said the prognosis is excellent for the New York Yankees manager.

"It was very routine," said Dr. William Catalona, a pioneer in the detection and treatment of prostate cancer. "I think he had a very early prostate cancer, and it went very smoothly."

Lab tests on the removed gland and surrounding lymph nodes won't be complete for a few days. But, Catalona said, "The way it looked to the naked eye, the prognosis is excellent."

Catalona said the cancer was so small he couldn't see it even as he held the removed gland in his hand.

Torre, the 58-year-old manager of baseball's best team last season, underwent the 2 1/2-hour surgery at Barnes-Jewish Hospital, where he was expected to remain for up to four days. Torre will then recuperate in Florida, family friend Jeff Wehling said.

There is no timetable for Torre's return to the World Series champions, but Catalona said his patients typically go back to work six to 12 weeks after surgery.

"I'm going to encourage him not to go back too soon," Catalona said. "He's got a very stressful job."

Driver's maneuver caused train wreck, witness claims

BOURBONNAIS, Ill. — A motorist who claims to have been directly behind the truck involved in the deadly Amtrak collision said the driver tried to snake through lowered crossing gates and beat the train, a high-level federal source told The Associated Press on Thursday.

The National Transportation Safety Board source, who spoke on the condition of anonymity, said investigators believe the motorist is credible and had a clear view of the accident, which killed 11 people and injured more than 100 Monday night.

"We are continuing to interview him, but his statements are not inconsistent with what the engineer originally said," the source said from Washington, D.C.

Amtrak's chairman, Wisconsin Gov. Tommy Thompson, had said the train's engineer claimed the truck driver tried to zigzag his tractor-trailer through the crossing gates after they had come down.

John Goglia of the NTSB said Thursday that there is still no indication the crossing signal malfunctioned. In a re-enactment of the crash using a truck and locomotive, the truck was able to zigzag around the downed crossing gates without hitting them.

The truck driver, 58-year-old John Stokes, told investigators the gates came down after he started across the tracks. Since then, he has hired a lawyer, and the attorney has barred authorities from questioning his client any further.

Federal jury rejects lawsuit, rules for tobacco industry

AKRON, Ohio — A federal jury handed the tobacco industry a big victory Thursday, rejecting a $2 billion lawsuit accusing cigarette makers of deliberately trying to hook less-educated blue-collar union workers.

The class-action lawsuit was brought by 114 Ohio union health funds in an attempt to recoup the costs of treating workers' smoking-related illnesses. It was the first of at least 14 such lawsuits around the country to go to trial.

After two days of deliberations, the jury ruled for the tobacco industry on all counts.

"We are delighted with the court's ruling," said Gregory Little, a lawyer for Philip Morris. "This jury sent a clear message reaffirming the health risks of smoking have been well-known for decades, and that cigarette companies have not withheld material information regarding health effects from the public."

"It's hard to understand how somebody could look at all that activity and then say that's all right or that didn't impact millions and millions of people," said Patrick Coughlin, attorney for the union health funds. "It's tough to lose this case, but there will be more."

The Ohio health funds argued the industry concealed the dangers of smoking and used promotional gimmicks and images such as Joe Camel and the Marlboro Man, "aware that people with lower incomes and less education are more susceptible to the advertising," attorney Mike Withey said.

The tobacco companies said there was nothing illegal about their ad campaigns and disputed the idea that blue-collar workers were more likely to be swayed by them.

Taxpayers missing benefits of earned income tax credit

WASHINGTON, D.C. — As many as 4 million Americans with modest incomes might be overlooking an IRS provision aimed at cutting or even eliminating their federal income taxes. In addition, the sheer complexity of the earned income tax credit leads to errors by many of those who do try to claim it.

Simply determining eligibility for the credit requires completion of a 12-question checklist, which is then followed by a nine-line worksheet and an eight-line form. All of this requires constant reference to several pages of Internal Revenue Service instructions.

The maximum credit is $3,756, and it is refundable — meaning it can trigger a refund even for people who don't owe any income taxes. Last year, IRS processed $29 billion in such claims resulting in $23 billion in refunds. Most of the rest resulted in a lower tax bill.

The Treasury Department estimates 20 percent of people who are eligible never attempt to put in a claim.

Candice Cromling, director of the IRS program, said it is worth the effort: The average refund for taxpayers claiming the earned income credit is running at just over $2,000 this year. That compares with a national average of about $1,600.

"It's quite a significant amount of money," she said. "It's a very good reason for people to file a tax return, even if they don't have to."

Egypt begins investigation into sale of orphans' organs

CAIRO, Egypt — Egyptian prosecutors opened an investigation Thursday into allegations that an orphanage sold the organs of some of its children to hospitals that cater to wealthy Gulf Arabs, resulting in a number of deaths.

The allegations were made earlier this week by 10 Parliament members, who demanded that the state launch a probe.

The legislators charged that 25 children had died within a three-month period last year in an orphanage in Shebin el-Kom, a town in the province of Menoufiya, 30 miles north of Cairo.

Mohammed Abdel-Aal, who formerly ran The Association for Handicapped Children orphanage, told Egyptian reporters Thursday that the allegations were untrue.

No charges have been filed against Abdel-Aal, and prosecutors in Menoufiya declined comment.

"We have no knowledge about the charges and have no evidence" of any trading in organs, Bahiga Hamam, who was appointed by the government as the new director of the orphanage, told Associated Press Television News.

The lawmakers alleged that organs from at least 32 children were sold for up to $30,000 each to large hospitals. They charged that 25 of the children later died and said some of the death certificates might have been forged. They also suggested that government officials might have been involved.

Parliament is in recess, and repeated attempts to reach the legislators were unsuccessful Thursday.

Abdel-Aal and his wife, Mona el-Gazzar, who ran a sister orphanage called The Association for the Improvement of Health, were removed as heads of the orphanages in late 1998 after an investigation by the Ministry of Social Affairs found financial irregularities and problems with the care being provided.

Mahmoud el-Naggar, head of the ministry's social services department in Menoufiya, told The Associated Press that investigators found "gross negligence, and financial and administrative irregularities."

"At least 20 children had died," he said. It was not clear in which institution the children had died.

The city of Manhattan Public Works Department is planning to improve the drainage ditch that runs along Tuttle Creek Boulevard from the Kansas River to McCall Road. The improvements will cost nearly $2.46 million.

City to make drainage improvements

By BRIAN HERNANDEZ
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The city of Manhattan Public Works Department has announced plans to improve drainage on the southeast part of town.

Jerry Petty, director of public works, said the improvements will consist of two projects beginning late this fall. The total cost of the two projects will be about $2.46 million. Petty said the projects could be completed sometime next year, although an exact time frame has yet to be determined.

The Federal Emergency Management Agency awarded the city a grant for the construction of the first project, the construction of a new storm water pump. Petty said the total project cost would be about $1 million, with FEMA committing to 75 percent of the cost. The city is responsible for the remaining 25 percent.

The new pump will be built at the Kansas River's flood levy located near the intersection of Poyntz Avenue and Tuttle Creek Boulevard. It will have about seven times the capacity of the existing water pump.

A retention basin also will be constructed near the intersection of McCall and Tuttle Creek Boulevard. Petty said the new basin would work like Tuttle Creek Reservoir, only on a smaller scale.

The second project will consist of several improvements to the drainage ditch that runs along Tuttle Creek Boulevard from the Kansas River to McCall Road. Petty said the ditch will be cleaned up, reshaped and lined with a surface to be determined at a later date. He also said the ditch will be landscaped for beautification purposes.

Petty said the ditch is in need of improvements for a couple of reasons.

"The ditch is not very efficient," Petty said. "It also is not very safe and is difficult for workers to get in and out of. This project allows us to improve the ditch's hydraulic efficiency significantly and make it safer at the same time."

The second project is being funded by the Kansas Department of Transportation. Its cost is $1.46 million, with KDOT contributing $1 million.

The city is responsible for the remaining $460,000.

B G Consultants has been hired to design the projects. Project manager Monty Prescott said he expected the design process to begin in the next week, and it would take four to six months to complete projects' designs. He also said B G would work directly with KDOT during the design process.

Prescott said there are a number of reasons why the ditch needs to be improved.

"Its appearance is not the best in the world," Prescott said. "It is also next to impossible to maintain because of its irregular slopes. Obviously, these projects will make the ditch safer a place and allow for better waterflow."

SUDS uses Internet to advertise parties

■ Senior created group to keep others informed about local party scene.

By JENNIFER O'NEILL
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Technology provides a new and innovative method for party-goers to get clued in about the local party scene.

Student Underground Drinking Society, better known as SUDS, is an organized party network for Manhattan started by a K-State student.

During his first semester at K-State in 1995, Richard Maxwell, senior in management information systems and president of SUDS, had an idea to start a mailing list to advertise parties.

"There's always someone who knows about a party that's going on," Maxwell said. "This is a more effective attempt to get it out, and students can plan ahead for the weekend."

By Maxwell's junior year, he had made enough connections that he could report a party every Friday and Saturday night and created a World Wide Web site to supplement the mailing list.

Maxwell said this is a benefit to the entire student body at K-State.

"The Greeks have always been together," Maxwell said. "We're not trying to separate us from the Greeks — just form a balance between everyone."

People can visit the SUDS Web site at www.networksplus.net/suds/.

SUDS has a governing board active in recruiting as well as party promotion. The organization has 173 members, called citizens.

These citizens are responsible for keeping their eyes and ears open for parties happening in Manhattan. To become a citizen of SUDS, fill out the form at the "Join Suds" link on the Web site.

"It's a good asset to the party scene," said Jake Palenske, junior in mass communications and an off-campus senator for SUDS. "There's a limited amount of places to go in Manhattan except for the bars, and for some, this offers an alternative to Aggieville."

There are senators and representatives at each residence hall, as well as off campus, all of whom post the parties on the SUDS Web page.

The "spill it" link on the Web site is for citizens to e-mail Maxwell, who will post future parties within 24 hours, but parties posted a week or two in advance are known to be a lot bigger, Maxwell said.

This link also will provide comments about the parties for people to determine whether they're worthwhile.

Another feature that Maxwell provides on his Web site is the "party favor" link to various toasts and the rules to a number of drinking games.

"This is a good way to guarantee a party on the weekends," said Jeff Wilke, sophomore in civil engineering and vice president of SUDS. "Some weekends are pretty dry here in Manhattan, and if we post these parties ahead of time, people can decide whether they want to stick around here on the weekends."

SUDS also supports responsible and safe drinking. SUDS members' promotion of parties at residences around Man-hattan offers people who are underage places to go and have fun, because many of the establishments in Manhattan, specifically Aggieville, require people to be at least 21 to enter.

"A lot of people think it's just all about drinking, but it's actually about getting together and meeting more people, because sometimes I don't even feel like drinking," Wilke said.

As for the future of SUDS, Maxwell said there is a lot of potential.

He would like to see a group of 10 or more houses become SUDS houses where residents can take turns and have parties to promote the group.

"If it gets big enough, maybe we can make a profit from the parties we throw and put back a certain percentage of that money into other parties hosted by SUDS," Maxwell said. "People really appreciate the service so far."

Students should use spring break safely

For those of you who are still here, the Collegian wishes you a happy spring break. We also, more importantly, wish you a safe spring break.

There are the obvious words of caution: If you drink, drink responsibly. If you're in the sun, wear sunscreen. Use the buddy system. Wear your seat belt. Etc., etc., etc.

It's also important, however, to have a safe trip. With so many people on the roads, accidents are bound to happen. When students come back from spring break, it's imperative they don't let their guard down on the road.

Spring break will provide a needed break to a long semester. Whether students use the time to party, rest or just catch up on schoolwork, hopefully everyone will come back to school refreshed and ready to take on the last six weeks of the semester.

OUR VIEW, an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board, is written after a majority opinion is formed. OUR VIEW is the Collegian's official opinion.

The Collegian's Reader Fourum is an anonymous call-in system that allows readers to voice their opinions on any topic for 20 seconds. To call the Fourum, dial 395-4444.

Here are some tips for calling the Collegian's Campus Forum:

■ Keep your comments based on issues, not personalities or personal vendettas.

■ It might be helpful to write down your comments before calling. There is only time for about two or three short sentences.

■ Give an original opinion. The Collegian will try to offer as many diverse opinions as possible, so be sure to put an interesting spin on yours.

■ Do not give too much background on the issue. Immediately state your stance or plan of action.

■ Be honest. We do not ask for your name, nor do we use Caller ID to see who the comments are coming from. Your opinion is completely anonymous.

■ The Collegian will not print any comments that are vulgar or obscene.

Why does the Collegian reprint the same Cryptoquip the next day? Do you think they can just pass it off and nobody actually does those?

For those students going on spring break by car westbound, buy your gasoline in Junction City or Salina. It's much cheaper than Manhattan.

You know who should replace Tom Asbury? Willie the Wildcat. His head isn't quite as big.

READERS write

Keeping campus offices active during lunch would please students

Editor,

We are writing this in response to the letter in Tuesday's Collegian about campus offices needing to stay open over the noon hour. We know there are a few offices on campus that remain open and available to students over the noon hour. We work in the mechanical and nuclear engineering office, and we are one of those few.

We began staying open during the lunch hour in August 1998, and we have received an enormously positive response from both students and faculty. It doesn't take much for us simply to arrange lunch breaks to ensure that at least one person is in the office at all times. We realize that in some campus offices this is not a viable option due to low staffing; however, in most offices if it is feasible, it is not being done.

K-State is a business first and foremost, and with all businesses, the customer must come first. Our customers are the students, and whenever possible, we need to put them first. We would like to challenge the other campus offices that can and are not already open during the noon hour to do so. It doesn't take much effort, but the reward is happier students (customers).

—Michele Hoffman, office assistant and office staff, Department of Mechanical and Nuclear Engineering

Safety First

Using common sense will make spring break safer, more fun for all

VIEWPOINT

GUTHRIE

Hasta la bye bye, as my cousin would say. For those of you still here, I'm sorry and I hope this coming week brings unending relaxation and rest. For those of you staying here and doing nothing but, say, computer programming all week, take a road trip and visit an old friend or go to Colorado where there's always skiing. At least get out of this town for a day or two.

I, myself, as if you care, am going to a sunny, not-crowded place. My main problem is that I have red hair. Now, to you, unless you're a fellow redhead, or hot head as my friend Janet calls us, that might seem like a pointless observation, but for those of you who have red hair you know that we don't tan. We burn. In fact, we're just a walking ball of cancer about to happen. Grim outlook for me, you say. Not so. That's why Johnson & Johnson invented SPF 5,000, which means I can put off a good second-degree burn for at least an hour.

Anyway, enough beating around the bush. My column this week is a somewhat motherly column. I want to alert all of you to dangers in the world outside of Manhattan. OK, so the dangers are ever-present here, too, but my guess is that most of us are leaving the Little Apple for a vacation. So let's focus on that.

As a member of STD, HIV/AIDS Peer Educators, I want to give you some safety tips for your vacation adventures, and I'm not just talking about travels, if you know what I mean. If you plan or are even remotely considering a sexual escapade, be sure to take your own condoms. This is especially true if you're traveling outside of the country. What do you check for? Come on, everybody, say it with me: latex, nonoxynol-9 spermicide, air pocket, expiration date and Made in the United States! We double dip ours, baby, so stick with the red, white and blue.

Also in regard to sex, don't compromise yourself and your morals, because as Janis Joplin said, that's all you've got. If you don't want to get into a potentially bad or dangerous situation, the best bet is the buddy system. Look out for each other. Don't let friends talk you into leaving without them if that's not what you agreed on before.

As an extremely active member in the creation of SafeRide and a previous member of Greeks Advancing the Mature Management of Alcohol, I must remind you to not drink and drive. If you think you're OK, try really hard to be objective and ask if you would get in a car with someone who's had as many drinks as you.

Along those lines, don't forget to buckle your seatbelt. Even if you are sober, others on the road might not be. Seatbelts save lives, so buckle up the second you get in the car.

Also (I know, nag, nag, nag), if you do drink alcohol, don't leave your drink unattended, because there are some morally compromised people out there who can't control their libidos. Open your own cans or bottles, watch the bartender mix your drink, and don't take so many shots that things look better upside down. You know, the usuals.

I know you've heard this all before, and you're tired of being lectured by everybody and their brother, and now this red-haired columnist is shoving advice down your throat, but please use common sense. Having fun doesn't have to, and shouldn't, be compromising to showing a little better judgment. I just hate hearing about people who have been hurt during spring break when a little common sense probably would have saved them. So if for no one else, do it for me. Think twice before acting.

Have fun next week, people. You don't need to worry about me — you can bet your bottom dollar I'm going to enjoy myself. So, if you are still here, that's good of you to stay until the last day. I hope you have a wonderful spring break and I also hope your teachers didn't decide this week off was meant to write an extra paper or read an extra book.

Hasta la bye bye!

Manhattan weather only permits 'A Dust of Snow'

The way a crow
Shook down on me
The dust of snow
From a hemlock tree

Has given my heart
A change of mood
And saved some part
Of a day I had rued.

"A Dust of Snow" by Robert Frost

The last thing I heard on the radio as I left for school last Friday was, "There is a severe winter-storm warning for all of our listening areas except Manhattan." The big storm of this winter season — the storm that paralyzed nearly the whole of this nation — left our town with nothing more than a few flurries.

I am one who enjoys all weather, from the warm spring days to those oppressively hot late-summer days. I like violent thunderstorms and days when it rains steadily for 72 hours. I even like those hard frigid days in January when the daily high doesn't get above zero, and your breath freezes upon your facial hair, and you can feel the ice on your mustache crack with every movement of your upper lip.

I like all this weather, but by far, my favorite weather of all is snow. The harder it's falling, the better. If it's a blizzard, then I'm in a mental state beyond manic. I like hiking in it, camping in it, playing in it, driving in it and getting drunk in it. It was because of a snowstorm that my ex-wife and I started dating.

Being a big East Coast city person, adjusting to the country life hasn't been easy, but over time I've grown to appreciate all Kansas has to offer. However, the one thing I just can't get over about this place is that we just don't get good snowstorms. It snows to the north; it snows to the west; it snows to the east; it even snows to the south. It snows everywhere but Manhattan.

My fondness for snow results from growing up in the suburbs of Washington, D.C. Every winter, D.C. gets four or five good paralyzing snowstorms, including thunder snowstorms. What really makes these snowstorms original to this city is the whole local ritual of the delaying and closing down of the schools and various levels of government.

When I lived there, the ritual would begin with the closing of Prince Georges County public schools. If it were below 40 degrees and partly cloudy, Prince Georges County schools would close. From this ritual initiation point and as a storm worsened, the various other local institutions would follow suit and close down or delay opening for an hour or two. The ritual would come to the end with the delaying or closing down of my school district, the Montgomery County public schools.

As a child, I would lay in bed during those snowy mornings listening to the radio as the voice ran down the list of closings. "... Federal government—closed, Maryland state government—closed, Virginia state government—closed. ..."

Twenty, 30, 40 minutes straight without a repeat the voice would recite the list of closings. "... Smithsonian Institution—closed, National Institute of Health—closed. ..."

I, like all D.C.-area children, waited and hoped the radio voice would announce the closing of their particular schools. "... Georgetown University—closed, Catholic University—closed. ..."

My bladder would be near bursting, but I dared not make a run for the bathroom for fear I might miss those most joyful of words, "Montgomery County public schools: closed."

So I continued to lay in bed listening. "... Prince William County public schools—closed, Fairfax County public schools—closed. ..."

For some twisted reason, Montgomery County would pride itself on sending its students to school during even the most oppressive weather conditions. At best, all we Montgomery County public-school children could hope for was maybe a one- or two-hour delay.

This can be no better exemplified than from the first big snowstorm we had when I was in fifth grade. D.C. residents awoke that morning to 2 1/2 feet of wet snow, and the flakes still were falling at a rate of two inches an hour with no sign of letting up. D.C. decided to dispense with ritual and instantaneously closed everything down, except for the Montgomery County public-school system.

Our brand new school superintendent just had arrived from New England, and he didn't understand what the big deal was. I guess 2 1/2 feet of snow is nothing more than a typical summer's day to him. It was unbelievable; "Montgomery County public schools—opening on time."

While everybody else got to sleep late in order to be fully rested for a whole day of play out in the snow, my peers and I were waiting at the bus stop. Although disappointed, we got to mess around for a bit in the snow while we waited for our ride. We waited for a bus that never arrived. An hour out in those elements is about the limit for little kids; longer is intolerable. The bus finally arrived, two hours late. We got school at 11 a.m., 2 1/2 hours late. Of course, most of the teachers couldn't make it in, so the place was running on a skeleton crew.

It was about this time our superintendent finally wised up and realized that D.C. is more of a sleepy Southern town than an arctic one, so at 11:30 a.m. he closed the schools. Great—now I had to wait for the bus to take me home again. Three hours later, the bus finally arrives at school. It was 3:30 p.m. when I walked through my front door, the exact same time I usually got home on a normal school day.

Although I didn't notice any prolonged absences from any of my peers at school when things returned to a normal after the winter crisis had ended, The Washington Post did print a rumor that there were Montgomery County school kids who became lost in that snow and still, to this day, are missing. Apparently, when the snow melted, they were all washed into the sewers.

Well, anyway, with all this messed-up weather we're having this year, I'm holding out for a white Easter.

English faculty trades with foreign peers

By SARAH BAHARI
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

English novelist Elspeth Barker is calling K-State home for a month. Barker, who teaches at the University of Norwich in England, came to Manhattan as part of a faculty switch with Steve Heller, professor of English. She plans to stay in Manhattan through the end of March.

This is the first time the Department of English has exchanged professors with a university outside of the United States. The department hopes to make this an inaugural experience, Elizabeth Dodd, associate professor of English, said.

The English department modeled its program after a similar one in the Department of Art, which has been switching with Norwich University for several years. The program not only includes an annual faculty switch but also student exchanges, Dodd said.

"Next year, we hope to try out a student switch, too," she said. "We're very enthusiastic about the possibilities, and Steve Heller is researching our options while in England to work out some of the finer details."

Students and faculty benefit from having Barker at K-State, Dodd said.

"It's nice for our students to receive a different perspective," she said. "Elspeth has a fabulous sense of humor, and all of our students can benefit from that. She is also our only female novelist on faculty, so that could definitely teach this university something."

Barker's first novel, "O Caledonia," is in bookstores, and she is working on her second novel. Local bookstores could have to special-order the second novel from England, because it could take months to arrive in the United States, Barker said.

Earlier in the month, Barker gave a fiction reading in Hale Library, reading from "O Caledonia" and several other excerpts from short stories. Because she was at a land-grant university, she decided to read a story about her pet pig, she said. She also will give a reading at Emporia State University.

This is Barker's first time in Kansas, although she said she has visited New York.

"My first time to see Kansas was when I got out of the airport, and I just thought how beautiful it was," she said. "The sky was this charcoal color, and it was absolutely enormous. It was so balmy outside. It was wonderful."

"I am enjoying my stay here immensely," Barker said. "It is such a beautiful campus. I like it very much, and there are many good writers."

The schools here are similar to those in England, but some differences exist, she said.

"Of course, here the schools are on a much bigger scale," Barker said. "There is a more rigid structure here, and I've found that students have to be much more attentive in class."

She said there are similarities between the two universities, and said she is happy to have this opportunity.

"Like Norwich, there exists a very relaxed atmosphere between students and staff," she said.

NATO prepares for airstrike if peace accord isn't accepted

By GEORGE JAHN
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — The Clinton administration said NATO will act against Serb targets if Yugoslav leader Slobodan Milosevic doesn't accept the peace accord ethnic Albanians signed in Paris on Thursday.

"The Serbs will be responsible for the consequences," Secretary of State Madeleine Albright said.

Air Force chief of staff Gen. Michael Ryan, meanwhile, said Milosevic's forces are well-prepared and well-equipped for such an attack.

"There is a distinct possibility we will lose aircraft," Ryan said.

Ryan and other top military commanders testified at a Senate hearing as negotiators on the Albanian side of the Kosovo dispute signed a peace agreement in Paris.

At the White House, press secretary Joe Lockhart said, "NATO will act if President Milosevic and the Serbs, through their intransigence at the talks or through further aggression, resist finding some political settlement."

Of a Serbian buildup of troops along the Kosovo border, Lockhart said: "Any buildup is of concern. Any further aggression here we would view as a grave mistake."

Albright, speaking with reporters as she prepared to brief senators on the latest developments, said she had a message for Milosevic: "NATO stands ready to take whatever measures are necessary."

Later in the day, the Senate was prepared to debate a move by Sen. Kay Bailey Hutchison, R-Texas, to restrict funds sharply for any U.S. military operation in Kosovo. Senate leaders delayed the debate until after the briefing from Albright.

Albright said she had spoken to Kosovo's Albanian leaders by phone, "and I congratulated them for their courage and vision in signing the agreement negotiated in Paris."

At the same time, she said, "the Serbian negotiators have gone backwards," refusing to even discuss the possibility of a NATO peacekeeping force in Kosovo.

"Obviously, there can be no agreement if the Serbs do not sign, and right now there is no sign that the Serbs will agree," Albright said.

"The situation is as clear as it could be. The Albanians have said yes to the accords and the Serbs are saying no," she said. She said that if Belgrade doesn't reverse course, "the Serbs will be responsible for the consequences."

Yugoslavia's air defenses are sophisticated and heavily defended, Ryan, the Air Force chief of staff, told the Senate Armed Services Committee earlier Thursday.

"These guys are very good, so taking on these defenses with air power will not be easy," he said. "There is a distinct possibility we will lose aircraft in trying to penetrate those defenses."

Ryan said the air-defense capability "not just in Kosovo but within the whole Yugoslav land mass" includes weaponry capable of shooting down U.S. warplanes.

This defense array is much more substantive than that in Bosnia by a factor of two or three times, Ryan said. Airstrikes helped bring about peace talks in Dayton, Ohio, which in 1995 helped end civil war in Bosnia.

"It is going to be tremendously dangerous," Marine Corps Commandant Gen. Charles Krulak said. Serbian air defense systems "are, in many instances, mobile. The terrain is very tough. And the weather cannot be underestimated. That can be a show-stopper in many ways," he said.

Adm. Jay Johnson, chief of naval operations, told the panel, "We should be under no illusions that this would be easy. The risk is high, in my view."

Wrestling club places 8th at national tournament

By JOSHUA KINDER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State wrestling club team walked away with an eighth-place finish at the National Collegiate Wrestling Association National Championships at Richland College in Dallas on March 12 and 13 after just a month of practicing.

Just two weeks prior to nationals, the Wildcats placed all seven wrestlers en route to a second-place finish in the Southwestern Conference Championships at Texas A&M.

The players said they were proud to be able to provide a good representation for K-State.

"I feel good to know that the team can represent K-State so well after just four weeks of practicing together," sophomore Shawn Ward said.

The Cats were lead by senior Matt Holovach at 235 pounds, whose hopes to finish the season undefeated ended as he lost to the Apprentice School's Darrick Walker in the championship match 3-1 in overtime.

Earlier, Holovach had continued his domination of his opponents as he buried Barret Diefenderfer of Lafayette College 25-9 to advance to the quarter finals, where he quickly disposed of Georgia Southern's John Walker with a pin. He then knocked off Damien Watson of Pensacola Christian in the semifinals to get to the finals.

"Holovach ran over all his opponents in the conference championships, and then did it again at nationals except for his championship match, where he lost in overtime," said team captain Adam Hayes.

Junior Chris Augustine and graduate student Brian Budke helped K-State to the top-10 finish as they took fourth and sixth, respectively.

Augustine wrestled at 165 pounds and went 2-2 in the tournament, while Budke went 2-2 in the 157-pound weight class.

The Cats' first-season success has given them momentum for the upcoming season as they plan to wrestle in the Oklahoma Sooner Open and the Fort Hays State University Open next year to set themselves up for more competition and possibly a higher national finish next season.

"It set us up pretty well for the future," Hayes said. "Next year, we'll be known and respected by the other teams. Now that we fared well in the nationals, we'll know what the competition's like."

K-State has committed to wrestle in the Big Southwestern Tournament, a possible matchup with the five NCWA Big 12 Conference teams and the five NCAA Big 12 schools next season.

The tournament would feature a clash of nationally ranked teams from both wrestling associations. The five NCWA Big 12 schools feature No. 6 Texas A&M, No. 7 University of Kansas and the No. 8 Cats. The NCAA Big 12 would bring four of the top-10 teams in the nation with No. 1 Oklahoma State, No. 4 Nebraska, No. 5 Oklahoma, and Iowa State, No. 7 in the nation.

Team prepares for Baylor meet

By SARAH CRAIG
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Wildcat track and field team has been contained indoors for most of 1999 but finally will break outside this Saturday at Baylor in Waco, Texas. For most of the athletes, this will be their first outdoor meet of the season.

The meet is a non-scored meet and will be host to Big 12 contenders Baylor, Kansas and Texas A&M, among other teams. Coach Cliff Rovelto said he did not know what teams would be competing, but that he expects decent competition.

"It's a good meet, but it's early, so not everybody is going to be ready to do really well," Rovelto said. "At this point in time, if you're an athlete who's going to be successful in the conference or who's going to be in the NCAA outdoor championships, you're still training pretty hard so you're not going to feel real fresh."

Junior Erin Anderson, who competes in the pole vault and high jump, said she will use the meet to set the pace for the rest of her season.

"For vault, I'd like to try to provisionally qualify," Anderson said. "In high jump, I'd like to start by getting a good jump to consistently jump at."

One factor that might hurt field athletes like Anderson is the weather. Rovelto said there might be rain this weekend, which could affect the competition.

"It doesn't appear as though the weather is going to be really good," Rovelto said. "Early on, you're kind of at the mercy of that, you just have to do the best you can under the conditions."

"There's a lot of events where, if it's raining, it's virtually impossible to qualify — a lot of the field events are that way. If it's slick or something, it's going to be hard for throwers Renetta Seiler and Anna Whitham to do well. It'll effect different events differently."

Despite the weather, many of the athletes said they have been looking forward to the outdoor season for a change of pace.

"For the team, it'll be our first meet outdoors," Anderson said. "Everybody's been looking forward to getting outside and running on a new surface, so it'll be good to see who's going to be on the relays and how everybody's looking."

Rovelto said that overall, a non-scored meet early on in the season serves one main purpose — to evaluate where the athletes are in training.

"It's kind of a measuring stick. You can kind of measure where you're at in your training," Rovelto said. "You do a time trial in practice, but it's a little bit different than a time trial against other people doing time trials."

"It's a good meet but it's early so not everybody is going to be ready to do really well."

STEVE HEBERT/KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State's Eva Novotna hits a return to Oklahoma's Danielle Knipp during their tennis match last season at the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex tennis courts. The tennis team will travel to take on the Baylor Bears this weekend.

Tennis team battles injuries, poor health as it enters spring break competitions

The K-State tennis team will play Baylor on Saturday in Waco, Texas, before going to California for two non-conference matches during spring break.

The Wildcats go into the matchup with a 3-9 overall record and a 1-2 mark in Big 12 play.

After suffering several injuries and illnesses, the Wildcats still are not completely healthy, but all seven players will make the trip to Texas and California.

Sophomore Martina Pospisilova has recovered from the flu that kept her out last weekend in Oklahoma but now is having wrist problems. Her status is questionable.

Freshman Kathy Chuda still is suffering from back spasms but has improved some. The flu is affecting sophomore Eva Novotna, but she practiced this week.

Head coach Steve Bietau said the injuries and illnesses have slowed practice this week.

"Normally we would be scaling back the volume of our practice," he said. "There are a lot more matches, and it becomes a fine-tuning process. As it turns out, we are scaling back our practices because we are not physically able."

Saturday, the Cats face a 9-3 Bears squad that is 3-1 in the Big 12 conference. Last year, the Bears finished fourth in the Big 12 Conference and qualified for the NCAA Championships.

Baylor has seven returning players from a team that lost 6-3 to K-State in Manhattan last April.

"They lost a very good player from last year and picked up another very good player," Bietau said, referring to Katja Kovac, a freshman who is ranked No. 51 in the country.

After the Baylor match, the team will fly to California for two matches against two top-25 teams. On Tuesday, the Cats play No. 21 Fresno State in Fresno. Wednesday, they play No. 12 Pepperdine in Malibu.

Bietau said the team doesn't get a chance to see these two teams often.

"We don't have a lot of scouting on them," he said. "I see some of their top players at some of the tournaments in the fall. Looking at their rankings you know that they are very good."

Bietau is looking for the team to play better than last weekend.

"The one doubles team that we have kept intact, of Anna Pampoulova and Alena Jecminkova, we expect to play better," he said. "Alena is in a situation now where she is growing more and more healthy from the injuries she had earlier. The more she plays right now, the better."

Bietau is hopeful of getting Novotna back into the doubles line-up.

"Eva has been one of the better doubles players in the country the past two years," he said. "She should be able to go in there and make an impact even if she is not 100-percent healthy."

The good weather this week has allowed the team to practice outside. The matches in Texas and California will be outside.

"This week, we've been getting adapted to playing outside," Bietau said. "The weather has been good to us, and it had given us a chance to do that."

The Cats take on Baylor at 1 p.m. Saturday at the Streich Tennis Complex. They play Fresno State at 1 p.m. and then end their trip with a 1:30 p.m. match Wednesday with Pepperdine.

Cats take on Oklahoma after season's first Big 12 victory against Texas

Defense key to stopping Sooners' winning streak, top Big 12 players

By MIKE VIETTI
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State returns home, sort of, this weekend for a three-game series with Oklahoma starting today at 3 p.m. at Phil Welch Stadium in St. Joseph, Mo.

The Cats, 9-11 overall and 1-5 in the Big 12 Conference, return to the field after notching their first Big 12 victory of the year in a three-game series with No. 9 Texas last weekend.

Oklahoma enters the series with a 14-9 overall record and a 1-2 mark in the Big 12. The Sooners head into the series riding a four-game winning streak, including two victories over Sam Houston State earlier this week.

Phil Welch Stadium will mark the seventh field the Cats will have played on this year.

"It's a great stadium, and they're excited to have us playing there," head coach Mike Clark said. "But playing in so many places affects the players' confidence as far as fielding goes."

Heading into the series with the Cats, Oklahoma has two of the top performers in the Big 12 in senior first baseman Casey Bookout and senior starting pitcher Jared Hoerman.

Bookout hit a blistering .405 with 26 home runs last season for the Sooners, both marks good enough for second in the Big 12, and is off to a fine start this year with a .432 average and five home runs.

Hoerman finished last season with a 7-5 record and a 4.98 ERA, but has improved dramatically this season to the tune of a 4-0 record with a 1.51 ERA.

Preventing Oklahoma from having big innings offensively will be key for the Cats, something they were unable to accomplish in their two losses to Texas.

K-State allowed the Longhorns to score three or more runs in a single inning four times.

"It came down to who played the best in the late innings," Clark said. "For the most part, we played quality baseball against the 9th-ranked team in the country."

The rotation against the Sooners will remain the same as it has against Baylor and Texas, with senior Derek Andersen, 2-4 and 6.08 ERA, starting Friday; junior Jason Wells, 2-1 and 6.75 ERA, starting Saturday; and freshman Brett Reid, 1-1 and 7.40 ERA getting the nod on Sunday.

From the plate, K-State was inconsistent against the Longhorns, with eight runs in its victory but a total of three runs in the two losses.

Sophomore outfielder Kasey Weishaar had his hitting streak snapped at 11 games in the Cats victory over Texas but still is third in the Big 12 in batting average at .467 and is fifth in on base percentage at .556.

"We've scored five-plus runs against some pretty good teams," junior third baseman Travis Andre' said. "As long as our pitchers throw strikes and we play solid defense behind them, I think we'll be fine against Oklahoma."

Despite the inconsistencies on both offense and defense, many players said they think the Cats are playing well now.

"I think the Texas series was the best we've had all year," senior closer/outfielder Andy Silva said. "We hung in there with the ninth-best team in the country and that's no easy task."

Athletes, fans add liveliness to sport competitions by learning the proper technique of trash-talking

VIEWPOINT

NEFF

Have you ever wondered what separates great sports like football from, say, lacrosse? Or why people tend to watch more basketball than, oh, "Hollywood Squares"? I think what makes these sports so great is the existence of trash-talking.

There is nothing greater than dunking on someone, or in my case, doing a nifty layup, thus earning the privilege of talking a little smack. The neatest thing about trash-talking is it livens up anything and immediately makes it more entertaining. For example, imagine a little trash-talking on "Jeopardy!"

Contestant: "What is the Hoover Dam?"

Alex: "The Hoover Dam? That has to be the dumbest answer I've ever heard. Of course it's the Aswan Dam. How'd you get on this show anyway? Stupid jabroni contestants."

I envision an instant ratings boost for "Jeopardy!" in future.

OK, in order to write this column properly, I first had to learn how to talk trash properly. The best I can do is, "By Jove, is that the best shot you've got, old boy?" It doesn't quite have that punch.

So, I went to Bob, who oddly enough isn't our professional trash-talking analyst, to learn. Unfortunately, Bob is like me and was clueless to the sacred art of trash-talking. We then ventured to the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex to seek out a couple of reliable sources to learn from. Most didn't impress us, but we finally found a couple of really talented trash-talkers. They didn't want their real names to be revealed, so today we'll call them "Milo" and "Otis."

Milo: "The key ingredient in any successful trash-talker's repertoire is extended knowledge of your opponent's mama. Insulting your competition's mama can throw off his or her game just enough to let you emerge victorious."

Me: "So I could say, 'Bob, your mama is so bad at basketball, she couldn't make the Clipper's roster, and it would work?'"

Milo: "It could."

Bob: "Ouch, that really hurt. I feel my jump shot leaving me as we speak."

Milo: "That's what you're shooting for."

Otis: "Also, enunciation is essential. Using the Queen's English ruins the effect, but they must be able to understand what you say. For example, (Milo) slobbers when he talks trash, so you can never understand what he's trying to say. It makes him sound like Sylvester on crack."

Milo: "Your mama was (unprintable, la, la, la, more unprintable stuff) last night."

I figured that was the end of the interview. Armed with knowledge and in order to avoid the impending brawl, Bob and I got out of there to test our new-found skill. The first place I got to test it was also probably the worst place I could possibly test it: the classroom. Professors don't like you talking about their mamas. I decided to leave the trash-talking to the professionals. After all, I've got no game to back it up.

With spring break in the horizon, many students are going to tanning salons to get their base tans before they leave for their vacations.

GOING BRONZE

By PAM LEWIS
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Spring break is finally here. The moment that college students have been waiting since the semester began finally has arrived, which is why many students have been frequenting tanning salons.

The onset of spring is a busy time for tanning salons. Not only do many students want to establish a base tan before they leave for their spring break destinations, but some want a tan for formal dances or because they want to wear shorts in public without feeling embarrassed.

Wade Phillips, owner of ProFitness in Aggieville, said this is one of the busiest times of the year for tanning salons.

"Our tanning appointments are out of control right now. We are turning people away," Phillips said. "People are white from the winter, and they want to get ready for spring break and the summer."

Tanning salons throughout Manhattan have experienced an increase in customers within the past month, he said, and their appointment books have been full from open to close.

Donna Novak, owner of TNT Tans Three in Manhattan and Topeka, said her establishment has stayed open late for the past few weeks because of the overwhelming number of appointments.

"Between the three stores, I haven't had a day's rest," Novak said. "I was open until 2 a.m. the other night."

Some might wonder why people are willing to go out to tan at 1 a.m.

"Tanning is a huge vanity industry," Phillips said. "Essentially, we are all vain."

Improving appearance and establishing a base tan were the reasons most people gave for wanting to tan, he said.

"I feel like you look better and healthier when you have a little color in your face," said Jill Curry, junior in secondary education, who plans to go to California for spring break with hopes of being on the game show "The Price is Right."

"I wouldn't be tanning as much if I wasn't going to California over spring break. I want to look good for Bob Barker."

Mindy Foreman, senior in economics, said she was tanning for similar reasons.

"I am trying to get some color so I don't burn when I go on my cruise," Foreman said. "A tan makes me look and feel better."

Novak said she thought many people do not realize that there are benefits to tanning. The benefits, she said, include improved circulation and stress relief. It helps to treat psoriasis and can be a good source of calcium, she said.

"Insurance companies are looking into tanning as an option for people with osteoporosis," Novak said.

She also said sunlight is a good source of vitamins, and the fad of tinted windows on both buildings and cars has contributed to a lack of vitamins that people receive.

"With sunlight, you do not know what you are getting because of the deteriorating ozone," Novak said. "Indoor tanning is in a controlled environment."

"Computers allow us to know how often and how long a person has tanned," she said. "I will turn them away before I burn them."

Novak acknowledged the benefits of tanning — also known as heliotherapy, which is the treatment of disease by sunlight — but most medical experts said the disadvantages associated with tanning outweigh the benefits.

The biggest disadvantage, according to dermatologists, is skin cancer. Ultraviolet radiation from the sun and tanning beds is the leading cause of skin cancer. Each time the skin is forced to darken itself, it is damaged that much more.

According to information from Lafene Health Center, people often believe that it is safer to tan indoors because tanning beds use mostly ultraviolet-A radiation, which is supposed to be less damaging to the skin than ultraviolet B. Even though exposure to UVA might reduce the chance of burning, it penetrates deeper than UVB

Tanning gives people a little color, possible health benefits and might increase the risk of edema, vascular-system damage and skin damage such as premature aging and wrinkling. If the eyes are not properly covered with goggles, there is an increased risk of cataracts.

Although some people might debate the issue, the answer for others is quite clear.

"I don't go to tanning salons," Amanda Robinson, freshman in pre-health, said, "because it is like paying for cancer."

Things to stay away from

There are several drugs that people should not be using if they are using a tanning booth. These drugs include:

- Many antibiotics such as sulfas and tetracyclines
- Some high blood pressure medicines
- Some tranquilizers, such as Librium
- Diuretics
- Some birth control pills
- Some oral medications used in treating diabetes

Local bands to be recognized at KLAMMIE award ceremony

By JOEY ECK
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

It's that time of year again. The late nights spent practicing, the last-minute gigs and the long hours on the road finally will be recognized.

The third-annual KLAMMIE awards have arrived, and two of Manhattan's more popular bands have been nominated.

The Kansas City/Lawrence Area Music Awards, a benefit for AIDS Walk Kansas City, recognizes local music talent annually by having an awards banquet similar to the Grammy Awards.

This year, the KLAMMIES will be April 10 at the Folly Theater in Kansas City, Kan., and will recognize area bands Ultimate Fakebook and Ruskabank.

Artists are nominated by a voting panel of people who work at radio stations, clubs and other venues associated with the local music scene.

Ultimate Fakebook brought home four KLAMMIES last year, including Best Alternative/Rock band, song, album and band of the year.

This year, the band once again has been nominated for Best Alternative/Rock band. Bill McShane, Ultimate Fakebook vocalist, said the nomination was a surprise because the band had not released an album since last year's awards.

"We've been playing a lot, so we've kept our name out there, but we really didn't expect this," McShane said.

Ultimate Fakebook recently released its second album at the beginning of March; however, the nominations are based on the work from the previous year.

One newcomer to the KLAMMIE awards is Ruskabank, a Manhattan ska band. The band released its first album in December and is nominated for Best Punk/Ska band. Members said they thought being nominated is just as meaningful as winning.

"All the bands that we're up against are deserving," Dave Spiker, Ruskabank vocalist, said.

Dave Studnicka, Ruskabank trombonist, said the nomination of both bands shows the Manhattan music scene already has been recognized.

"Just by being chosen shows that the people who nominate do recognize that there are good bands not only from Lawrence and Kansas City," he said.

Both Ultimate Fakebook and Ruskabank members said they encourage fans to get out, vote and show their support.

Fans can vote by filling out and mailing in ballots obtained in Pitch Weekly, available at Streetside Records and the Dusty Bookshelf in Aggieville. Ballots must be received by 5 p.m. March 29 in order to qualify.

Eric Melin, Ultimate Fakebook drummer, said it is important for Manhattan fans to learn about the KLAMMIES.

"If they are going to legitimize the local music here, they need to support it," he said.

Chris Mayne, Ruskabank saxophonist, said that by making the effort to vote, fans can show their support for the local music scene.

"It's good for us to know that fans go out and vote," Mayne said. "It tells us that they want the bands here to succeed."

Guitarist to perform at BirdHouse series

By CRISTY ANDERSON
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

An acoustic guitarist/vocal soloist has returned to Manhattan due to popular demand.

Patty Larkin will perform at 8 tonight at the Manhattan Center for the Arts as part of the center's BirdHouse concert series.

The BirdHouse Productions series is an acoustic music series featuring nine or 10 concerts throughout the year.

MORE INFO? Tickets are $10 for students and $12 for adults at the Manhattan Arts Center at 537-4420.

helps schedule BirdHouse performers and said Larkin had performed previously in Manhattan.

"She was here about 15 months ago, and her concert was sold out," Kamerer said. "People not only came out last time but asked us to bring her back, so they can bring their friends."

"Our goal is to bring in compelling artists. We never know if this is the last time we will be able to get her."

Mary Spiro Levin, receptions for the arts center, said she thought Larkin is the Alanis Morissette of her genre. She is popular among people who are familiar with this kind of music, Spiro Levin said.

"Her last performance reflected why she is so successful," said Gretchen Holden, a member of the BirdHouse board of directors. "It was carefully planned and well-executed down to the detail."

Kamerer said he thought Larkin is one of the most powerful artists in the Birdhouse series, and that Larkin's latest album, "Perishable Fruit," is original because the only sounds recorded are either voice or string instrument.

Folk singer Don Conoscenti is the opening artist for Larkin.

"He is worthy of his own concert," Kamerer said. "We are thrilled to have both performers on the same night. This will be a two-for-one concert."

Kamerer said Conoscenti won first place out of 300 songwriters in a contest sponsored by the Rocky Mountain Folk Festival. That achievement makes him the best unsigned songwriter in the country, Kamerer said.

This concert will benefit those who aren't leaving for spring break, and having the concert on the first night of spring break has been a success in the past, Kamerer said.

K-Staters to build homes

Habitat for Humanity chapter to work in Texas

By SETH TROTTER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The beaches and bars of South Padre Island and Florida or the ski slopes of Colorado are prime spring break locations. Some students go to these places, but some would rather spend their break helping others.

Seventeen K-State students will spend their spring break volunteering. The group is leaving on Sunday for San Antonio with Habitat for Humanity to help those in need.

The group will build and renovate houses with Habitat for Humanity workers, architects and engineers.

Last year, a group from K-State went to New Orleans to help. It was the first year K-State had been a part of the program.

Deborah Madden, senior in marketing and international business, participated last spring break.

"It is called Collegiate Challenge," she said. "What you do is work on houses. You will build a house, or help renovate it."

Other schools across the nation also will help during spring break.

"Last year when we went to New Orleans, there was a school there from Minnesota," Madden said.

Students will help with houses that might have been started by other universities doing the same program.

"We renovated one home and built the frame on another," Madden said. "The whole thing is a continuing process that different universities had done."

"We have an excellent bunch of students this year," said Mike Hafling, architectural engineering and construction science instructor and Habitat for Humanity supervisor.

"This is a good way to get the K-State name out there and show that we care," he said.

The trip costs $69, plus some expenses in San Antonio.

"The local chapter of Habitat for Humanity provides housing for the students," Hafling said. "They usually stay in a church or high school. They are also given a couple meals each day, like breakfast and lunch. Supper is the only meal they have to pay for on their own."

The K-State Habitat for Humanity chapter meets on the third Tuesday of each month in the K-State Student Union. The next meeting will be at 9 p.m. April 20 in the Union Big 12 Room.

Hafling said he is proud of the student turnout for meetings this semester.

"At the last meeting this month, we had about 80 students," he said. "That is great, considering how late it is and that most students would want to be studying at that time."

Senate to consider bill for electronic gambling

By DAVID MILES
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — Electronic gambling machines would be allowed at dog and horse tracks under a bill that was the focus of a lengthy hearing before the Senate Federal and State Affairs Committee on Thursday.

The committee took no action on the bill, which would allow the Kansas Lottery to operate slot machines and electronic gambling machines, such as video poker, at parimutuel racetracks.

It also heard testimony on a bill that would allow electronic gambling machines other than slot machines in bars, clubs and certain other places where lottery tickets are sold.

Chairwoman Lana Oleen, R-Manhattan, said she wasn't sure if her committee would vote on the bills and was concerned about the bickering among supporters over how the profits would be split among the tracks, local governments and the state.

"It makes it hard to pass a bill when it's fractured over bucks," Oleen said.

Supporters of the racetrack bill said it would have a positive economic effect on Kansas and help keep racetracks — some of which, like the Woodlands in Kansas City — struggle from nearby riverboat casino competition.

Opponents said the measure would hurt other legal forms of gambling in the state, such as bingo halls and the American Indian casinos in northeast Kansas. They also said it would increase gambling addiction, theft and embezzlement.

"Citizens expect the state to promote the welfare of citizens, not destroy citizens and businesses with casinos," said Glenn Thompson, executive director of the anti-gambling group Stand Up for Kansas.

Plan could increase aid to community colleges

By LEW FERGUSON
The Associated Press

TOPEKA — A southeast Kansas legislator is proposing a change in the way the state provides funding to community colleges and Washburn University.

The plan, offered by Rep. Richard Reinhardt, D-Erie, would replace the current credit hour state aid system with state operating grants to the 19 community colleges and Washburn. It would eliminate out-of-district tuition that counties pay when their residents attend college in other counties.

The proposal would increase state aid to the 20 schools by nearly $15 million in its first year. Community colleges would have to use 80 percent of that increase to reduce local property taxes collected to help finance the two-year colleges.

Washburn wouldn't be required to use the extra $1 million it would get under the plan to reduce property taxes. The Topeka university could use the new money for program enhancements or to delay property tax increases.

Reinhardt, an education advocate who has served on committees studying higher education reform for years, will present details of his plan to the House Education Committee today.

He outlined it Thursday as the committee opened hearings on a plan developed in the Senate to restructure higher education governance and coordination in Kansas. The Senate is expected to debate the bill Tuesday; the House committee began work on it Thursday.

"I have been trying to figure out a fair way to fund community colleges from a statewide perspective," Reinhardt said in an interview. "The current credit hour aid system creates behavior by people to go out and offer courses as a source of revenue rather than the prime objective of providing a service."

Instead of having the state provide financial support to the community colleges and Washburn based on how many full-time equivalent students they have — those taking 15 credit hours — Reinhardt's plan would provide a state operating grant tied to what it costs to educate underclassmen at state universities.

Presently, the state's share of what it costs to educate freshmen and sophomores at the six state universities is about $3,900 per student, Reinhardt said. His plan would pay the two-year schools and Washburn half that amount, or $1,950 per student.

Under the plan, Johnson County Community College, the state's largest two-year school, would get $5.3 million more a year than it now receives from the state. Other schools receiving large increases would be Kansas City, Kan., Community College, $2.4 million; Garden City Community College, $1.4 million; and Butler County Community College, $1.1 million.

Using 80 percent of the new money to reduce property taxes, Johnson County's tax lag would drop from 7.2 mills to 6.2. The biggest drops — more than five mills each — would be in Allen County, Coffeyville, Labette County and Neosho County.

Board of Regents Chairman Bill Docking and three presidents and three trustees of community colleges testified Thursday.

Docking, of Arkansas City, said the plan awaiting Senate debate could burden board members with too much work.

Presently, the entire nine-member board governs the state's universities. Under the plan, that responsibility would fall more heavily on three board members serving as a commission on universities.

The three commissions — one to run the universities, one to oversee community colleges and one to coordinate all the schools' programs, including Washburn — would comprise the new Board of Regents as the policy-making body that would approve what the commissions recommended.

Docking suggested the legislation create the commissions only for a set period of time, then abolish them and let the regents create their own committees to divide up the work load.

"I think it's the best thing that has been laid on the table in the last 30 years or so," said Jackie Vieth, president of Butler County Community College. But, she said, "Funding must accompany the bill."

"The current credit hour aid system creates behavior by people to go out and offer courses as a revenue rather than the prime objective of providing a service."
